Mr. President, the Seawolf submarine is certainly a technologically advanced, remarkable system which is the result of the dedicated efforts of many skilled Americans. But it is a cold war submarine, which the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs believes no longer represents a significant national security priority.

The rescission package before us would restore the funding for this submarine, making instead cuts in the strategic defense initiative, the B-2 bomber, and other cuts known to be unpalatable to the administration. These are programs which not only have the support of the administration, but also in recent votes, the support of the majority of this Senate. To substitute these cuts for the elimination of the Seawolf and other programs serves only to discourage future attempts to pursue rescissions of wasteful or unnecessary spending.

Yesterday I supported an effort to amend this legislation to put at least some of these defense cuts back in the form requested by the administration, eliminating programs which are no longer deemed by our defense experts as being of significant use.

Because we have been unable to put this rescission package back into a form which can become law, and thus enact real cuts, I will oppose this rescission package and urge my colleagues to do the same. I would also hope that, should the bill pass, that the views of the House on the Seawolf issue would prevail in conference.

I do hope that the rescissions proposed by the administration, and advanced yesterday by my able friend, the Senator from Arizona, JOHN MCCAIN, can still be passed into law. I understand fully that there is no requirement for Congress to simply enact the President's proposals in the exact form that they were received. Certainly it is proper for the Appropriations Committee to consider these and to modify them as they deem appropriate. But this particular language is, as we know, unacceptable to the administration and cannot become law, on the other hand, I do believe that a package could still be passed that a majority of the Senate could support, as could the administration. We ought to yet turn this bill into something we know will be signed into law, and put the resultant savings back in the Treasury. I hope we can do that and I yield the door.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, when President Bush indicated that he would submit to Congress a list of appropriations items to be rescinded, I fully supported his efforts. Though I knew that funding for some items beneficial to the State of Washington benefits might be cut, my support was unwavering. I firmly believe that for the greater good of the country, the deficit must be brought under control. And that means that spending must be reduced.

I spoke with several of my constituents about the rescission plan, even some whose items were targeted to be cut. Among those who were directly affected was Mr. Harvey Beck, a mink rancher from Granite Falls, WA. Mr. Beck was facing a cut of $46,000 to a program studying the use of squawfish, a predator of the endangered Red Fish Lake Sockeye salmon, as feed for mink. Though mink ranchers across Washington would benefit from this program, Mr. Beck supported my position and encouraged me to reduce the deficit. I appreciate Mr. Beck's support.

That is not to say that Mr. Beck's project is unimportant. It is, and so are the two other Washington State agricultural items included in the President's rescission package, cool season legume research and small fruit research. I support these research programs and believe that Congress was correct to fund them.

Fortunately, none of these programs were included in the rescission package introduced by the Appropriations Committee. In spite of this, I am voting against the rescission package of the Appropriations Committee. It is a purely political attempt to further a Democratic agenda not geared at lowering the deficit. One agricultural item cited for cuts illustrates this particularly well, the USDA Pesticide Data Program [PDP]. A total of $5 million is directly and indirectly being taken from this important program.

The Pesticide Data Program was initiated to collect actual pesticide residue data on fresh fruits and vegetables. This data is then used to form the basis for conducting realistic risk assessments and setting pesticide tolerances. In addition, the program assists the Environmental Protection Agency in addressing pesticide reregistration issues and removing troublesome pesticides from the market in a timely and effective manner. In the end, both farmers and consumers benefit.

The cuts in this program will be felt in Washington State well beyond the $600,000 that went directly to State agricultural research labs. Washington State farmers, as well as those across the nation, will feel the effects of this rescission. The deadline for reregistering pesticides manufactured prior to 1984 is 1997. Many of the pesticides requiring reregistration are vital to production. Yet, without funding for this program, much of the data necessary for reregistration will not be collected, and those pesticides will be lost. The results could be devastating to farm communities everywhere.

Despite the importance of this program to the farmer and consumer, it is targeted for cuts. There is no practical benefit to curtailing this program, only minor political gains at the expense of many. I strongly oppose the inclusion of this item in the rescission package.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, in a few moments, we will resume debate on the rescission bill for fiscal year 1992 and, frankly, I think that is good news. Anytime you have the President suggesting there are programs that we do not need to fund, or maybe have outlived their usefulness, or perhaps programs that should never have been funded in the first place, I think that is good.

I commend the President for sending a rescission bill to the Congress, and I urge my colleagues in the House and the Senate to find a way to pass a rescission bill that the President can sign.

I also think it is important that we commend the Appropriations Committee members for the efforts that they have made. I do not agree with all of it. But we will never get 435 House Members and 100 Senators and the President of the United States to agree on every detail. At least, they made an effort.

Unfortunately, I think in the case of the Senate Appropriations Committee proposal, they took out some rescissions that clearly should have been left in, programs that we do not need. We voted yesterday to put several of them back in. That failed. Why, I am not quite sure.

Also, the priorities within the defense category that the committee came up with are wrong. But I want to emphasize again, I think this effort is good. When was the last time we heard the Senate really talking about trying to make a few cuts, a few rescissions? If we learn anything from this exercise, let's understand that the world does not end if we try to cut old, unneeded programs.

We are talking about a very few billion dollars and a Government that is $4 trillion in debt. So when you talk about rescissions that would save us $7, $8 or $9 billion, it is small potatoes, but it is a beginning. And for the Senate, I think it is a small step in the right direction. So I want to begin by being positive in saying that this is a good process, and I am glad we are going through with it.

Beyond that, I am very much worried about what we are doing. I think, again, that we are involved in playing games, if you will. We wonder why the American people have a low regard for Congress. In March, a Gallup Poll of congressional job approval found that 78 percent of Americans disapprove of the job Congress is doing. Why is that? A lot of reasons.

There is always going to be friction between the executive and the legislative branch. That is as it should be. But I think it is also because of the gamesmanship, the brinksmanship that we have been engaged in all year long.

We had campaign finance reform last week. It was a farce. It was a joke. The President is not going to sign it. There was no real effort to make it bipartisan. We need campaign finance reform. That bill was not really campaign finance reform. It was a bill that was totally partisan and is a bill the President is not going to sign. But yet, we insisted on going forward, shoving it down and saying: Go ahead, Mr. President; veto it.

Earlier this year, we had a bill that started out to be a tax growth incentive for the economy, but ended up a spending bill. The President said: Do not send it up here; I will veto it. The Congress had their way. We sent it to him and he did veto it.

What are we accomplishing? The process is not working; it is broken. It is gamesmanship; brinksmanship. Why? Here we go again. The argument is the President had his Rose Garden announcement about the rescissions, and we will teach him a lesson. We are going to send him a bill he will not sign. If I were the President, I would send it back down here over and over again, saying: Congress, until you get this right, I am going to keep sending it back. It is a matter of priorities, and we can disagree, but we need to find some ways to agree.

This bill is headed for a veto. It is not necessary. We are doing the right thing talking about rescissions, but we are getting the priorities wrong.

For instance, as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I am worried about a rescission package. In the categories of operation and maintenance, the Senate package significantly increases the cuts over what the President asked for, or even what the House has in its package. And in several instances, it is double or triple. It goes from $92 million, in the case of what the President asked for the Army; the Senate package is $190 million in cuts. It goes right down every branch: Navy, Army—the Marines are not included—the Air Force. So we are cutting more in operation and maintenance, the one place we should not be cutting.

Conversely, the committee reduced the number of cuts in procurement. This is a place where clearly priorities do make a difference. The debate yesterday on the Seawolf submarine was: Look, we understand industrial base problems. We understand there are jobs at stake. But the question is, what do we need in view of the threat? Where is the threat that would cause us to need more very large, heavily laden submarines? I do not think it is there.

Is there a threat, though, that would cause us to have a need, perhaps, for the long-range, manned B-2 bomber? I could suggest several points around the world where we might need that.

Do we need to go forward with the strategic defense initiative? When you look at some of the people around the world who are working on developing a nuclear capability, who are seeking to acquire multiwarhead nuclear missiles, and where they would be fired from and to, we begin to say: Strategic defenses make good sense.

But what does this package do? It takes another B-2 bomber out; it takes a lot of money out of SDI and puts it over in not one, not two, but a third Seawolf submarine. I do not understand the judgment there.

Last year, we will remember in the armed services authorization bill and in the appropriations bill, we labored mightily over the numbers and the compromise that produced the numbers of aircraft and the money for the B-2 bomber. We also had protracted, good debate on the strategic defense initiative.

We came to an agreement between the Members of this body, the House and the Senate, and the administration on a very carefully, well-thought-out, well-crafted package that was developed with the efforts of the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, and so on down the line; very carefully crafted.

We came to a conclusion, which I think is what we need to do, and yet because of what we are going through with the rescissions, we are going to change that. We are going to change that formula on the B-2 and change it on SDI, and we are going to move it all over in the Seawolf submarine.

Mr. President, I think we have our priorities tangled up. I hope that the Senate will not go forward with this package, but if it should pass the Senate, I urge the conferees to correct the errors that have been made in this package. Perhaps the House and Senate conferees can develop a package that will be good for the country, that will cut spending some, that the President can sign, and we can stop the brinksmanship and the gamesmanship. The American people would like it. They do not understand when we say we cannot get together, Republicans, Democrats, Congress, and the President. They say, "Forget all of that. Find a way to do what is necessary to cut Federal spending. Find a way to do what is necessary in a bipartisan way, working congressionally and in the executive branch to deal with problems like health care. Stop this stuff and do your job."

Do you know who will be rewarded? We will, if we find a way to work together and do the responsible thing. That is the best politics, to do the right thing in cutting spending.

Yesterday was the National Taxpayer Freedom Day. Is that not interesting? You have to pay taxes up to that point to pay what you owe Uncle Sam. Let us give the people a bonus this year. Let us come up with a rescission that can save some money we do not need to spend. Let us not play games with this. Let us either change this package, beat this package, correct it in the conference, but in the end let us do something that will save money, that the President can sign. That is the right thing to do.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, before we finish debate on this bill, I want to discuss briefly an issue that apparently will have to be resolved in the House-Senate conference on this legislation. The House Appropriations Committee has included in the bill it has reported a provision that will have the effect of extending noncompetitively a major health contract of the Department of Defense. The contract, generally referred to as the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative Contract, is a multibillion-dollar demonstration program for managed health care services for CHAMPUS beneficiaries. The contract is scheduled to terminate in July 1993.

For some time now, the current contractor has been seeking a legislated extension of the contract. Any such extension of course would preclude competitive bidding, thus denying various competitors the opportunity to bid on a replacement contract and denying the public the cost savings that normally accompany competition in contracting. The contractor has found a receptive audience in the House Appropriations Committee, which last year was able to include in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act a specific noncompetitive extension. That extension was ultimately defeated only because: First, the Defense Authorization Act included contradictory language; second, the President signed the Authorization Act after the Appropriations Act; and third, the GAO determined that in such circumstances the authorization language must be considered controlling.

The issue has now been presented again in the context of the current rescission legislation. Since there is no accompanying authorization measure before Congress at this time, however, the advocates of a noncompetitive extension find themselves in a stronger position procedurally. Those advocates are sponsoring a provision that while not explicitly extending the contract would have the effect of doing so. The provision would withdraw funding for the bidding process to replace the current contract until a study of the Department's proposed new contract can be completed. The study must be detailed, it must be performed by an independent organization not yet designated, it must compare the costs and benefits of all the currently competing managed health care approaches being tested by the Department, and it must address the issues of beneficiary satisfaction, access to care, patient convenience, local versus regional control, and positive versus negative incentives. Bidding cannot resume until all of these issues have been resolved, presumably a very long time from now during which the current contract necessarily will have to be extended noncompetitively.

The provision has emerged from the House Appropriations Committee and undoubtedly will be included in the rescission bill that passes the House. Unless the Senate conferees are able to reject the provision in conference, a serious injustice will result. The current contractor will benefit, but only at the expense of the general public and general principles favoring competitive bidding.

I take this opportunity, therefore, to urge the Senators who will be conferees on this bill to reject the House provision in the strongest possible terms. Legislation of this sort not only harms taxpayers and health insurance beneficiaries, it demeans the system. The Congress simply ought not to countenance such measures no matter how strongly—or frequently—they are advocated. I am convinced that last year's outcome was the right one. It should be reaffirmed.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I find this exercise that the Senate is going through today extremely frustrating. we are being asked to decide between cuts to appropriations enacted into law for fiscal year 1992—rescissions of $7.83 billion submitted to Congress by the President on March 10, and 20, April 8, and 9 or alternatives cuts of $8.27 billion proposed by the Appropriations Committee.

In the case of the President's rescission package, it has been proposed as cuts to programs that Congress added on to fiscal year 1992 appropriations that the administration has deemed unnecessary. The vast majority of the rescission package, $7.14 billion, is in defense programs. The most controversial rescission is the President's request to delete $2.76 billion in past appropriations for the Seawolf attack submarine. This rescission was not a congressional add-on, but funds that had been requested by the administration and supported by Congress. There is also a cut of $1.5 billion in National Guard and Reserve equipment requested by the administration.

Reacting to what I believe to be a blatant political maneuver by the President, the Appropriations Committee has reported out a political package of its own. Instead of congressional add-ons and the Seawolf, the substitute amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee contains a number of programs for rescission that are important to the administration including $1.3 billion for the strategic defense initiative, $1 billion for the B-2 bomber, $131 million for the National Aerospace Plane, $49 million for the Asat Program and $47.5 million for the advance launch system.

Mr. President, what we have before this body is dueling rescissions.

More importantly, why are we debating a package or packages of cuts more than half-way through fiscal year 1992? I thought that this process had already occurred. Did we not debate these issues last year? The Senate and the entire Congress voted on these programs. We voted to support the $4.15 billion in SDI. We voted to support the Seawolf. We voted to include funding for NASP and Asat and ALS. And the President signed the Defense appropriations bill for fiscal year 1992 into law.

I am especially worried about what a $1.3 billion cut will do to the SDI Program. Last year, under the leadership of Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and its ranking member, we hammered-out a bipartisan consensus on the direction of the SDI Program. The Missile Defense Act of 1991 called for the initial deployment of an ABM Treaty compliant, antiballistic missile defense at Grand Forks, ND. It placed considerable emphasis on the near-term fielding of theater missile defenses and urged the President to pursue immediate discussions with the then Soviet Union on negotiating changes to the ABM Treaty. Additionally, we determined that space-based interceptors would not be included in the initial plan for the limited defense architecture.

Mr. President, I read with interest the provision in committee report accompanying S. 2403 dealing with the $1.3 billion cut in SDI. The report reads, and I quote, "* * * The recommendation retains full funding for the limited defense system programs and theater missile defense programs contemplated in the Missile Defense Act of 1991." The reports continues, stating, "* * * The Committee retains sufficient funds to support the limited defense system and theater missile defense programs and would rescind funds which emphasize the space defenses and other follow-on systems efforts."

While this report language sounds as if funds have been earmarked for programs emphasized in the Missile Defense Act of 1991, S. 2403 is silent on this issue. The bill simply rescinds $1.3 billion from the strategic defense initiative.

I have spoken with the chairman of the Defense Subcommittee and he has assured me that in conference with the House of Representatives it is his intention to write language specifically ensuring that funds intended for the theater missile and limited defense system elements of the strategic defense initiative are protected. I thank the chairman for his efforts.

Mr. President, despite these assurances I cannot vote for legislation that cuts $1.3 billion from the strategic defense initiative. A cut of this magnitude, should it become law, could destroy all the good work that was accomplished last year. I find this committee amendment to be an unsatisfactory response to an unsound initiative by the administration. I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to oppose this appropriations rescission bill. While I believe the President, in good faith, selected 224 projects for rescission, the Appropriations Committee has substituted its judgment for that of the President, and has made inappropriate selections.

In particular, the President proposed over $7 billion in defense rescissions based on Defense Department analyses of programs that are no longer needed in the post-cold war era. The bulk of the President's cuts came in the Seawolf submarine, M–1 tank conversion and F-14 aircraft modifications. These decisions were made after a careful analysis of the Nation's security needs in this era.

By contrast, the Appropriations Committee has rejected many of these defense cuts and instead has substituted funding for projects that are no longer necessary. In particular, the Appropriations Committee has determined that funding should continue for the Seawolf submarine.

Mr. President, what is the threat that the Seawolf is intended to counter? The submarine modernization program of the former Soviet Union? There is no such program. Quite the contrary. The governments of the former Soviet Union have committed to reducing their submarine force and do not have the resources to decommission nuclear submarines, no less build new advanced versions. The Seawolf is simply a jobs program for Connecticut, not a project that is needed to enhance our Nation's security.

Moreover, the Appropriations Committee approved only $12 million of the $737 million in domestic program reductions proposed by the President and substituted what the administration has labeled a gimmick. What the Appropriations Committee has done is to rescind $742 million of section 8 subsidized housing certificate amendments. But this does not result in any decrease in Federal spending. Instead, the rescission would only increase the unfunded liabilities for these long-term subsidies.

Mr. President, we ought to stop playing fiscal politics with the American people. We should have adopted the President's rescission package for it contained cuts that were rational, not political.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to express opposition to the committee substitute and express support for the underlying bill incorporating the president's rescissions. I support the domestic and international rescissions in both packages, but feel constrained to vote against the committee substitute because of its failure to rescind one of the biggest port-barrel projects in our history. Is it not ironic that as the Senate considers this rescission package, it maintains spending for unnecessary, wasteful projects. Yesterday the Senate defeated the McCain-Roth amendment to incorporate the rescission of the Seawolf submarine into the committee substitute. Because of this, I will vote against the committee package—it simply fails to go far enough.

As one who consistently votes "no" on spending bills which pass this Chamber with 90 and 95 vote majorities, I was cheered by the President's decision to send a package of rescissions to the Congress. Unfortunately, the committee substitute is vastly different than the rescissions the President proposed.

I support every rescission the President proposed and every domestic and international rescission contained in the committee substitute. But by failing to incorporate the Seawolf into the package, the Senate continues to fund unnecessary and wasteful items—in this case—$3 billion worth of wasteful spending. This substitute, as it now stands before the Senate, simply protects too many pork barrel programs. The committee substitute misses an important opportunity to save money that the President and Secretary of Defense defined, programs where cuts could be made without harming our ability to respond to threats that may emerge in the post-cold war era.

Simply put, the administration presented the Congress with a list of programs that are no longer necessary in light of the rapid disintegration of the Soviet Union. These programs had been approved by the Senate prior to the failed coup attempt and the dissolution of the Soviet Union.

Last September, when the Senate debated the fiscal year 1992 Defense appropriations bill, I was 1 of only 10 members of this body who recognized that the Seawolf submarine was no longer needed. I joined with Senator McCAIN in calling for its termination then, as I did yesterday.

Last fall, I also supported termination of the B–2 bomber. However, when the appropriation and authorization conferees reported to the Congress, I found that three B–2 bombers had been deleted, but not the $2.5 billion that should have been saved. Now the Senate appears to have found the missing B–2 savings and a use for that money—to maintain projects established during the cold war that are no longer necessary. Mr. President, we must get rid of the weapon systems that are no longer needed—not turn them into pork barrels that put our Nation deeper in debt.

We must give credit to the President for recognizing the end of the cold war and criticize the Senate for failing to make a similar recognition. Today, the Senate has voted to restore funding for cold war programs that clearly have no value for our national security.

The budget deficit is expected to exceed $350 billion this year. The 1990 budget agreement was supposed to get the deficit under control once and for all. I voted against that agreement because I believed it would hurt the economy and do nothing to limit Government spending. Unfortunately, that assessment has turned out to be all too true.

I completely support the domestic and international rescission in the committee substitute and the President's package. I support rescissions of $9.2 million in the Economic Development Administration, $6 million in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, $15 million in study evaluations by the Public Health Service, $8 million in unused administrative funds of the Health Care Financing Administration, and $1 million in the Bureau of Mines.

I could go on to list all of the domestic and international rescissions proposed by both the President and the Committee, and I support them all. Unfortunately, this bill is being held hostage for unnecessary and wasteful defense programs, and I refuse to lend my support. I just hope the conference committee on this bill comes back with a more sensible approach, and we can rescind all of these unnecessary programs in one batch.

We have been engaged in a sham here in recent years as the Congress has justified real tax increases with promises of spending control. The taxes are enacted but the spending is never controlled. The President's rescission package was a strong attempt to get at more than $7 billion in wasteful, unnecessary spending. I support the President's package. But I cannot support the committee substitute.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in an effort to reduce wasteful spending, the administration has sent to Congress 224 proposed rescissions totaling $7.8 billion. The President's list was not meant to be political. It contained items supported by both Democrats and Republicans. There were even a number of items that had been proposed by the senior Senator from Kansas.

I do not believe the President expected his entire package, or even a large portion of his package, would be approved by Congress. But the one thing he did expect was that Congress would give each item on his list a serious second look.

Well, after reviewing this bill and watching the floor debate, I do not think Congress has given the President's rescission proposals fair and adequate consideration. Out of the President's $737 million proposed domestic reductions, the Appropriations Committee only approved $12 million in cuts.

While I have not had the chance to review the President's proposed rescissions line by line, it is difficult for me to believe that less than 2 percent of the President's domestic reductions were worthwhile.

While the Appropriations Committee may claim the difference has been more than made up by a $743 million rescission of section 8 certificate amendments, this rescission will not decrease Federal spending—It is a gimmick that merely postpones spending 1 and 2 years into the future. That is not exactly what the President had in mind when he sent up his list of budget cuts in March.

Instead of bickering over gimmicks, this debate should have been about facing up to the tough choices. If we are going to cut the defense budget—if the world is changed and the threat is diminished—and if we are going to build down our forces—then something has to give.

The key question is whether we in the Congress can make the tough choices based upon legitimate national security needs or whether the only thing that matters is what State is involved. It is getting to the point that we in the Congress are choosing up sides and picking Democrat and Republican weapons systems. Make no mistake. The debate over these rescissions is about politics. And I must confess that the irony is a little hard to ignore.

Some are just now discovering what defense cuts really mean. Yes, lower defense spending will cost jobs. Defense cuts will cost us technology, and lower defense spending will cut into our industrial base. If we are going to have fewer ships, then we need fewer shipyards. If our Army is going to be smaller, then fewer bases are necessary. Fewer procurement dollars means that some industries will lose markets or even go out of business. Anyone who did not understand this before now just was not paying attention.

It is easy to criticize President Bush for not cutting defense fast enough. And it is easy to express outrage when tighter defense dollars force cancellation of major weapons systems, submarines, or base closings. But this kind of political gamesmanship does not take the place of the tough choices necessary to maintain our security—especially at lower spending levels.

I realize I am walking a difficult line here. No one, including myself, wants to see their appropriations projects or home State defense industries eliminated. But, I believe in fair play, and fair play is not what we have here.

Instead of a serious attempt to cut the budget, we have a political poison pill, laced with lethal cuts in the strategic defense initiative, the B-2 bomber program, and dangerous budget gimmickry. If the Senate's goal has been to give the President the royal brush off, we have succeeded and succeeded well. But in our attempt to one up the President, we have once again given up another opportunity to make serious cuts in the deficit. Is it any wonder the public is growing increasingly cynical about Congress' ability to move beyond politics and get something accomplished?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose this rescission bill. I am not opposed to cutting wasteful spending, but I do oppose making cuts in critical strategic programs and other defense-related programs.

I strongly object to the rescissions of $1.3 billion for the strategic defense initiative, and $1 billion for the B-2. Last year on the floor of the Senate, we debated for long hours the merits and demerits of funding these to important defense programs. We reached a consensus, and decided to proceed with both SDI and the B-2. We made that decision based upon a rational judgment of our national security priorities.

However, this bill virtually cuts both systems by 50 percent contradicting our considered judgment we made when we voted last fall. This cut is totally unacceptable and incompatible with our defense needs. Yet, if this bill passes these cuts will have been accepted by default and not debate.

The real issue for the American taxpayer is how much more money do I have to pay for Washington's mess? The President sent to Congress a real rescission bill, but unfortunately it has been replaced by this irresponsible defense slashing bill.

During the Senate appropriations Committee markup, I opposed the committee bill. The committee approved only $12 million of the $737 million in domestic program reductions proposed by the President, and substituted this gimmick.

This is not a responsible solution to a fiscal mess. I am ready to support a real rescission bill that cuts wasteful spending and keeps our national security strong. It is time that we stop using money from the defense budget to fund ridiculous programs that need to be stopped outright. We must eliminate both useless defense programs and useless domestic programs. No program should be immune from the fiscal ax if it cannot be justified.

The question this Congress has to ask itself when spending for useless programs is this: If you had to pay for this program out of your own pocket—would you? Let's treat the American taxpayer with the same level of respect.

This rescission bill does very little to curb excessive Federal spending. Therefore, it is not worth my support.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, we have debated at length today the actions of this body regarding the rescission legislation now before us. I would like to speak briefly at this time, however, about one particular action of the House that concerns the legislation. As was the case last year, the House Appropriations Committee has again reported a proposal—this time as an amendment to the rescission bill—under which one contractor would have the opportunity to extend an extremely lucrative contract beyond its termination date without competitive bidding. The committee's initiatives in this area have been consistently opposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee, the House and Senate Armed Services Committees, and the Department of Defense, whose combined support of competitive bidding principles last year defeated the committee's effort. Since the effort is being pursued again, however, and since this matter will no doubt become an issue in the upcoming House-Senate conference on this bill, I wish to say a few words about it.

The contract, the CHAMPUS reform initiative or CRI contract, is the largest health contract in history. It has produced government payments over the past few years of approximately $3 billion. By its terms, the House Appropriations Committee's proposal of last year would have extended the 5-year contract for 1 additional year. Effectively, however, it would have required a 3-year extension. As I indicated, the committee's efforts in support of this proposal ultimately did not succeed.

This year, the committee's amendment to the pending rescission legislation would bring about the extension in a different manner. Instead of specifically mandating a noncompetitive extension, the committee has proposed a study that inevitably would result in such an extension. Three months ago, the Department of Defense issued an RFP for its coordinated care program or CCP contract, the contract that is intended to replace the current CRI contract on August 1, 1993. While I will speak further about the coordinated care program at a later date, I would like to focus for a minute on the committee's amendment. It would halt the bidding process under that RFP until a detailed and comprehensive study is conducted by an independent organization evaluating the costs and benefits of all the currently competing managed health care approaches being tested by the Department and addressing the issues of beneficiary satisfaction, access to care, patient inconvenience, local versus regional control, and positive versus negative incentives. While I do not disagree with the desire to obtain information regarding managed care approaches, the measure appears to be aimed at prohibiting competition. That concerns me. Any such study will take a substantial period of time to complete, during which time the bidding process now under way will not be able to proceed further. The consequences will be a substantial delay in the award and start work dates of the new contract and, thus, a substantial noncompetitive extension of the CRI contract.

The committee's stated purpose in requiring the study is to subject the Department's CCP contract, which the committee opposes on policy grounds, to a rigorous analysis. The committee has indicated a strong preference for the current CRI contract, a preference that is shared by many CRI beneficiaries. I do not doubt that the committee's members sincerely oppose the Department's program, or that different members have different orientations with regard to the proposed study. It is simply too much to attribute to coincidence, however, that each proposed action of the committee on this issue invariably pushes in the direction of a noncompetitive extension of the current contract. Different rationales are given, and different proposals are offered, but the result is always the same. While there are means to address the committee's policy concerns without sacrificing the benefits of competition, it is notable that these means are never chosen.

I raise this issue simply to express my strong view that the Congress ought to insist on competitive bidding except in extraordinary circumstances—which are not present here. I urge those who will be conferees on the bill to firmly resist the House Appropriations Committee's position to the contrary.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise to speak in opposition of this so-called rescission bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee.

I am disappointed to have to do so on this particular day—the day after Tax Freedom Day 1992.

I bet most people didn't even know that yesterday was Tax Freedom Day—meaning that today is the first day that average Americans are earning a paycheck for themselves, rather than to pay their tax bill.

This year Tax Freedom Day was the latest date ever, falling 4 days later than last year.

The average American now works 126 days a year just to pay the tax bill. The tax bill that keeps going up because Congress keeps on spending.

The President forwarded to the Congress a true rescission package aimed at cutting what is commonly known as pork-barrel spending. This was a small, but significant step, to get some control of Federal spending so that we can stop the rapid progression of Tax Freedom Day into June.

Congress has responded with pure politics.

The President's package was a tough package. It affected projects in my State that I had supported. It would have been a tough vote.

But now I don't have to cast that tough vote.

This package is not aimed at pork-barrel spending—the kind of special interest funding that outrages many Americans. The kind of spending that prompts papers like the Missoulian in Missoula, MT, to call on us to "Just Say No to Pork" saying that "it's time for Congress to cut all special interest spending."

No; this package is just another attempt by the other side to slash Defense spending. And it cuts at the heart of one of the most important Defense programs of the post-cold war era, the strategic defense initiative.

The contrast between important defense programs and pork-barrel spending could not be more stark.

First of all, we debate and vote on contentious strategic programs at length. Last year alone, the Senate voted deeper cuts in the SDI budget three times. We debated the issue at length.

In contrast, most pork barrel projects are never debated and never voted on individually. Many of them are slipped in during conference—never having been considered by either body.

A decision to cut SDI by $1.3 billion is more than a rescission—it is an important policy decision.

A cut of this magnitude will deal a serious blow to the SDI Program. It will leave our Nation without any ballistic missile defense this century, and contrary to what some might believe, we are not a nation immune from the risk of a nuclear launch.

The proliferation of nuclear weapons continues. Saddam Hussein is still in power and is fighting hard to maintain his long-range nuclear weapons development plan.

The former Soviet Union is still in the process of restructuring their military. We're not even sure who controls their long-range ICBM's aimed at us.

Hundreds of former Soviet scientists are in the market possibly selling their wares—their knowledge of nuclear weapons—to other countries.

The risk is there, if not for an intentional launch by some madman, for an accidental launch. I think the American people expect us to protect them from that risk.

I hope my colleagues will vote against this bill—that they will vote against playing politics with the money and the safety of our citizens.

It is not easy to cut pork-barrel spending, Mr. President. It requires us to exercise some leadership. Leadership being the willingness to abandon narrow self-interest for the good of the Nation.

This bill does not start us on that road of leadership, Mr. President, it continues business-as-usual and for that reason, I will vote against it.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today the Senate takes a somewhat historic step as it acts on a free-standing rescission package. Of course we've dealt with rescissions before, but this marks the first occasion since adoption of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 that rescissions have come before us without cover of some other piece of legislation.

Today, we truly vote on deficit reduction, plain and simple.

I do have some regret about the manner in which this body and the House of Representatives have gone about the rescission task. Upon receiving the rescission orders sent to Capitol Hill over the last 2 months, I believe it is accurate to state that Congress has engaged in a game of one-upmanship with the administration.

From the outset, the rescission process has more resembled a multibillion-dollar partisan battle of sacred cow goring rather than the process which the crafters of the Budget Act likely envisioned.

This has been regrettable.

Those disappointments notwithstanding, the fact remains that before us we have a proposal to trim some $8.3 billion from the fiscal year 1992 budget, and as I see the matter, wasteful spending is wasteful spending, regardless of who can claim authorship rights.

Last fall, I supported amendments to the defense authorization and appropriation bills to reduce our fiscal year 1992 expenditures for SDI and the B-2. While each of those amendments failed, the continuing evolution of the world in this post-cold war era has made such reductions more timely than ever.

I am disappointed that we failed yesterday to make the rescissions the President called for with respect to the Seawolf submarine. The termination of this program was the first step in President Bush's proposal to cut $50 billion from the Pentagon over 5 years.

Therefore, I must admit to a degree of confusion in seeing so many individuals in this body who advocated defense cuts of two and three times the President's mark failing to support the very first specific defense cut to come before us. If those advocates cannot find it in themselves to cut the first $2.8 billion, it defies me to determine how they will find the conviction to cut the next $100-plus billion.

I supported the deeper defense cuts proposed in the Senate budget resolution, I remained true to that position in voting to rescind funding from the Seawolf, and I intend to further exhibit my willingness to make the necessary cuts by voting to rescind funds from the B-2 as well as from the strategic defense initiative.

Mr. President, while I recognize that partisan handling of this legislation by the Congress has placed it at odds with the administration and raised the probability of a Presidential veto, I am also a realist.

At this time, the Senate does not appear ready to approve a rescission measure more closely resembling the President's package, and I fear that the defeat of the Appropriations Committee substitute will result in the death of this bill.

Again, unnecessary spending is unnecessary spending, and our $4 trillion national debt cannot support the continued escalation of spending without justification. Therefore, I will support this substitute in hope of keeping the rescission process alive, and upon the appointment of conferees for this legislation, I will encourage them to work toward a package which will meet with White House approval, and result in true deficit reduction.

I suggest the adoption of the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now vote on the committee substitute, as amended.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 652, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 652) to protect the privacy of telephone users by amending section 3121 of title 18, United States Code.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to protect the right to privacy of telephone users by enabling them to limit the dissemination of their telephone numbers to persons of their choosing; and

(2) to encourage the use of new services such as call trace, call reject, and call return, which operate to discourage harassing and obscene telephone calls even though information identifying the caller may be blocked.

SEC. 3. AMENDMENT OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) PROHIBITIONS.—Section 3121 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§3121. General prohibition on pen register and trap and trace device use; exceptions

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this section, no person may install or use a pen register or a trap and trace device without first obtaining a court order under section 3123 of this title or under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.).

"(b) EXCEPTIONS.—(1)(A) The prohibition of subsection (a) does not apply with respect to the use of a pen register or a trap and trace device by a provider of electronic or wire communication service—

"(i) relating to the operation, maintenance, and testing of a wire or electronic communication service or to the protection of the rights or property of such provider, or to the protection of users of that service from abuse of service or unlawful use of service;

"(ii) to record the fact that a wire or electronic communication was initiated or completed in order to protect such provider, another provider furnishing service toward the completion of the wire communication, or a user of that service, from fraudulent, unlawful or abusive use of service; or

"(iii) if the provider of the electronic or wire communication service permits the originator of a communication to a recipient to block caller identification—

"(I) on a per call basis without charge;

"(II) on a per line basis with or without charge, in a State in which it is authorized by statute or regulation prior to the date of enactment of this clause, and at the request of the originator; and

"(III) on a per line basis without charge at the request of an originator that is a victim of domestic violence protected by court order, a victim's service program, or a battered women's shelter or other organization providing safe haven for victims of domestic violence.

"(B) Subparagraph (A)(iii) shall not be construed to require a provider of electronic or wire communication service to enable an originator of a communication to block caller identification—

"(i) on the emergency assistance telephone line of a State or municipal police or fire department or on a 911 emergency line;

"(ii) on calls within a customer's system; or

"(iii) to a recipient of a communication that uses call return service in connection with billing information associated with returned communications.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the prohibition of subsection (a) applies with respect to the use of a pen register or a trap and trace device in connection with all communications to governmental entities except a communication on the emergency assistance telephone line of a State or municipal police or fire department or on a 911 emergency line.

"(3) The prohibition of subsection (a) does not apply with respect to the use of information that is made available to a recipient through an automatic number identification service, to the extent that the use consists of—

"(A) use for billing and collection, routing, screening, and completion of the originating telephone subscriber's call or transaction, or for services directly related to the originating telephone subscriber's call or transaction;

"(B) reuse or sale after the recipient orally notifies the originator of the recipient's desire to reuse or sell the information and extends to the originator an option to limit or prohibit such reuse or sale;

"(C) use for the purposes of—

"(i) performing a service or transaction that is the subject of the communication;

"(ii) ensuring the quality of network performance, the maintenance of security, or the effectiveness of call delivery;

"(iii) compiling, using, or disclosing aggregate information;

"(iv) complying with law or a court order; or

"(v) offering to an originator of a communication with which the recipient has an established customer relationship a product or service that is directly related to products or services that the originator has previously purchased from the recipient of the communication; or

"(D) use for any lawful purpose if there is available to the originator of the communication the ability to block caller identification to the recipient—

"(i) on a per call basis without charge; or

"(e) PREEMPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no State may prohibit, in any way other than in accordance with subsections (a) and (b), the making available by providers of electronic or wire communication services or the use by their customers of caller identification service.

"(f) INTENT OF CONGRESS.—This section is intended neither to endorse nor to facilitate the use of blocking of caller identification by originators of obscene or harassing telephone calls, nor is it intended to limit the enforcement of laws prohibiting such telephone calls.".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 3127 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting a semicolon; and

THE URBAN CRISIS AND THE HEALING OF AMERICA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the events of the past week have been a sad time for our country and a sad commentary on how far we still have to go to achieve the fundamental ideals at the heart of the promise of America—respect and opportunity for each individual and equal justice for all.

I believe I speak for the vast majority of Americans of all races when I say that the verdict in the Rodney King case was a stunning miscarriage of justice. The Federal Government now has the obligation to see to it that the rogue police officers who inflicted that savage, senseless, almost unbelievable beating are punished for their crime. I commend the Justice Department for expediting its investigation.

There are many precedents for Federal action where State justice has failed, and this is plainly a case where Federal intervention is needed. The Federal criminal civil rights statutes were enacted a century ago, precisely for application where State officials refuse to obey the law or State juries nullify the law.

I fully expect that there will be a Federal prosecution if the Federal Government is true to its Federal responsibility. America could not stomach the beating we witnessed on television, the lawless official violence that widens the war in our streets instead of controlling it.

The vast majority of law enforcement officers are law-abiding and dedicated to their work. In conditions of great stress and danger, they perform with superb professionalism of the highest order. But we also know that there are thousands of other Rodney Kings, in hundreds of other communities, who have suffered similar violence, who have been bullied and beaten badly, but where there were no video cameras to record the lawbreaking of those sworn to uphold the law. Who among us believes that black victims of any crime suffer less and therefore deserve less justice?

At the same time, we must reaffirm with equal vigor that violence is not the proper response to injustice. Appalling as the King verdict was, it was no excuse, none whatever, for resorting to the crime, murder, arson, destruction, and devastation that convulsed Los Angeles and threatened to shatter so many other streets and neighborhoods across the Nation. My family, too, has suffered, and suffered deeply, from the pervasive violence that has become a hallmark of our time. So I feel a sense of kinship with those who suffer from it too—and a sense of urgency that we act wisely to prevent it in the future.

The pressing challenge we face together is to direct our concern and outrage into constructive paths. It is time, it is long past time, to address the serious issues that divide our society and deny hope to so many of our citizens.

For 200 years, resolving the profound question of race has been the great unfinished business of America. Our inability to resolve it peacefully in the 19th century led to the most painful war that America has ever fought, a war between ourselves. The beating of Rodney King—the trial, the verdict, and the aftermath—represent the latest explosion of the worsening racial tensions in our society. Too often, whites and blacks view one another with suspicion, with fear, and even with hatred.

The prejudice that blots our land has had many manifestations. It was not very long ago that young Irish men and women growing up in Boston met the sting and the scorn of help-wanted signs in street windows saying "No Irish Need Apply." Those days are gone for Irish-Americans, and if we keep the faith today, they can be banished as well for all Americans, so that we shall overcome, once and for all time, the even deeper bigotry based on the color of our neighbor's skin.

In the recent days of rage, men and women of good will have joined together to condemn violence. And the sooner we summon the wisdom to condemn bigotry with equal strength and conviction, the sooner we will conquer the temptation to violence that is tearing the fabric of our society.

We have to prove to our citizens—all of them, especially those who have the least—that there is reason for hope, that peaceful change is possible. What President Kennedy said in the 1960's is equally valid in the 1990's: "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable."

The civil rights movement of the past half century has been called the second American revolution. And its greatest strength is that it has been peaceful. Black and white talked together and walked together. They marched together and sometimes died together, to break down the most visible barriers of racism that divided America against itself. The integration of the Armed Forces, the end of segregation in the public schools, the right to eat at a lunch counter, to sit in the front of a bus, to stay in a hotel, to buy a home, to hold a job—and above all, because it is the basis of all other rights, the right to vote in an election—these are the monumental achievements of an America that honored the best of its heritage and sought to live up to the historic promise of the Declaration of Independence that all of us are created equal.

But those were the achievements of a past generation. The fire and the flames of the past week were a warning signal to our generation. The momentum of justice must not stop. Ideas like opportunity and progress must not become alien concepts that have no meaning to whole areas of our cities, and whole segments of our population. From south-central Los Angeles to Roxbury, despairing faces are pressed against the windows of our affluence. But all they see is hopelessness, because for too many, the American dream has become a daily nightmare of crime and drugs, of unemployment, of schools that do not teach and communities that do not care.

It is a measure of our pain and our failure that during the decade of the 1980's, the Federal Government's prison building program exceeded its public housing program.

We must try harder to understand. We must show black America—we must show all the disadvantaged and dispossessed—that they can have hope for their future too, that government at every level is their government, too, that America is their America too, or else America will never be America.

We must return to basic principles that make a difference in people's lives—education, jobs, opportunity, justice.

We may never completely eradicate racism as we know it in America. But it is our responsibility to teach every child of every race to turn to each other, instead of against each other. Only then will we have hope for a peaceful coexistence.

To begin the racial healing, to reach for racial harmony, we must talk to each other, all of us, with a new candor and commitment, across all the traditional barriers of race and class and party, of public pursuit and private life.

We must work together, Republicans and Democrats, Governors and mayors, Congress and the administration. This is not a time to be casting blame. To do so will only further poison the wellsprings of society, rub salt in its open wounds, and guarantee that the flames will burn again.

The generations who came through the civil rights struggles of the 1950's and 1960's know how far we have come in moving toward equality. But the younger generation in our inner cities needs to see and hear from us that there is leadership in our government that sees and senses their condition and their anger.

The pictures of last week were not just of black anger, but of white anger, Latino anger, Asian anger—anger of all types.

We must offer hope to those who feel forgotten. We must reach out to black Americans who think white America does not comprehend or care or respect their rights. We must meet with community leaders and address their concerns, and ask their help in seeking shared solutions.

In my view, there are two immediate responses that Congress should make to the King verdict and its aftermath.

First, we must find new ways to bring Americans together. That means new lines of communication among citizens and between citizens and government. We need much more extensive forms of community service. The people who spontaneously came out in Los Angeles to clean the debris, and cleanse that city's spirit, should be the vanguard of many different efforts, public and private, to make our country whole. Our diversity must be our strength, not our weakness. We must prove that "E pluribus unum" is not just an empty slogan but a founding truth that still has vital meaning for modern America.

Second, Congress must launch specific initiatives equal to the challenge. I favor a legislative response, with action as soon as possible in the coming weeks.

In social programs, the emphasis should be on doing more in areas where Federal action can make an immediate difference, such as summer jobs and other job-creating and job-training programs, as well as health care and Head Start—which all of us know will work, and will work immediately to ease the need and suffering.

On education, a major reform of Federal aid to public schools has passed the Senate and will be taken up by the House in June. Enactment of that legislation will be the clearest possible demonstration that our goal is to improve the public schools, not abandon them.

We know that if we give our schools the chance, they can make a difference in the success of even the poorest children. In conversations with school principals in Massachusetts, it is clear that they are desperately concerned about their pupils' worsening lives. School principals cite the deprivations, not to excuse their schools for not doing enough, but to describe their starting point. Many children, perhaps the majority, do not have the security and stability they need to learn and develop. They have had to deal with staggering issues of personal violence, drugs, death, hunger, dirt, depression, and hopelessness, before they even learn to count from one to ten.

Each of the principals says that conditions have become far worse in the 5 years. As the economy declines, as more parents are out work, as more social services are cut, the severity and number of the problems brought to school have soared, and the schools have suffered, too.

Federal chapter 1 funds can make difference here. The dollars go specifically to disadvantaged students. When well used, they make it possible to identify and devise strategies to teach the neediest, to rearrange some of their instruction to give them personal attention and unlock their potential.

Let me describe two cases I have heard in recent days that show in human terms what our answer can be to the tragedy of the riots.

An Hispanic second grade boy from Dorchester, the oldest of six children, had a poor attendance record. His school, the Mason in Boston which I visited two weeks ago, uses chapter 1 funds so that each child is in a class of 15 and teachers are able to watch each student carefully. The teacher visited the boy's home, and learned that his mother, a single parent, often made him stay home to take care of the younger children.

The teacher pushed the parent to let her son come to school, and his attendance improved. The teacher also put him into the after-school chapter 1 program and assigned a Boston University mentor to him. The mentor discovered that he has an extraordinary capacity to use images in writing. His school performance has soared. He was the first third-grader this year to recite all 50 States. He routinely brings in extra work, his own writing, and now he wants to be a writer. The Hispanic male dropout rate is 43 percent nationwide, and 53 percent in Boston. But this young man is the way to beat those odds.

Or take the case of a 13-old black seventh-grade young man who came to the Timilty School in Roxbury from Georgia, where he had been expelled from his previous classroom and had a criminal record. His first months at the Timilty were difficult. He did little work, usually failed, and frequently disrupted events.

The Timilty uses its chapter 1 funds to lengthen the school day, so that teachers can work with very small groups of students on special projects. One of the young man's teachers recognized that he had an unusually strong and appealing voice. She started using tape recorders with her small group, having them read from work they had written. The young man stood out in this activity. Eventually, the work turned into a full-scale black history presentation for the entire school, featuring him as the star.

Everyone was impressed by how he had memorized his lines, by his eloquence, his inflections, his posture—all were superb. He became serious about all his work, and he succeeded and graduated. The production also had an effect on the teachers and other students in the school. No one had believed that this young man could be turned around.

Daily small miracles like these are taking place in Boston and across America. They do not make headlines like the riots, but they show us the way out of the despair that breeds alienation and violence. Education has always been the cornerstone of the American dream, and it will continue to be, if we are wise enough to make the investments that all our schools so urgently need.

In law enforcement, the emphasis should be on additional aid to State and local authorities. We should insist on the enactment of clear nationwide policy training standards and Federal enforcement authority, to reduce the likelihood of excessive use of force, and to root out the negative effects of race discrimination in all aspects of the criminal justice system. The Police Corps is an excellent idea; it can bring new recruits and new perspectives to police departments across the country.

To begin to address the crisis, I am calling today for action by Congress, as soon as possible, and certainly before the end of June, on an urban emergency supplemental appropriations bill. The goal is to help meet the most pressing unmet needs our cities face, by supporting proven programs that can put new funds to work immediately.

I therefore propose a $5 billion appropriation for the following 11 initiatives:

Community development block grants, $1.45 billion;

Community Development Corporations, $100 million;

Summer youth jobs, $700 million;

National and community service, $150 million;

Head Start Summer Program, $500 million;

Chapter I Summer Program, $1 billion;

Community health centers, $100 million;

National Health Service Corps, $100 million;

Emergency food and shelter, $100 million;

Police corps, $100 million; and

Aid to law enforcement, $700 million.

This is not a lot of money; it is one-half of one percent of the total Federal budget. It is a small, essential down payment on the future of America.

As I have emphasized, all of this must be done with and through the community. The communities themselves must set their own priorities. Critical resources must come from the Nation, but most of the most critical decisions must come from the neighborhoods.

Those who always oppose progress will say that we should not reward the rioters. This proposal is nothing of the kind. Its goal is to begin to rescue the millions of law-abiding parents and children who are as appalled by the riots as we are, but who are equally appalled at the way their country has forgotten them.

Some will ask, how will you pay for this? My reply is that the budget law specifically authorizes Congress to declare an emergency, and make expenditures such as this without requiring cuts in other vital programs or raising taxes on already hard-pressed families.

We have declared emergency spending on several occasions in recent years. Kuwait was one of them. Now the fires have come home to America. For us, this emergency is even greater.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed summary of these proposals may be printed in the RECORD.

SUMMARY OF EMERGENCY, SHORT-TERM ASSISTANCE PLAN FOR AMERICA'S CITIES

The riots in Los Angeles demand an immediate national response which speaks directly to the underlying causes of the disturbances and provides federal assistance through community-based organizations to meet them:

Lack of jobs, especially for young adults, and assistance for the small businesses that create jobs;

Insufficient educational resources for younger children, which lead to inadequate job skills;

Inaccessibility of basic health services;

Lack of basic food and shelter for the poorest in our communities; and Inadequate training of police and lack of involvement with distressed neighborhoods.

This plan will provide immediate relief to our cities and lay the foundation for more far-reaching action in the coming years. $5 billion would be made available, through a supplemental appropriation on an emergency basis, to provide the following supplemental funds:

I. Job Creation and Small Business Development, $2.4 billion.

A. Community Development Block Grants, $1.45 billion.

B. Community Development Corporations, $100 million.

C. Summer Youth (JTPA), $700 million.

D. National and Community Service, $150 million.

II. Educational Investment, $1.5 billion.

A. Head Start, Summer Program, $500 million.

B. Chapter I, Summer Program, $1 billion.

III. Improved Availability of Basic Health Services, $200 million.

A. Community Health Centers, $100 million.

B. National Health Service Corps, $100 million.

IV. FEMA Emergency Food and Shelter Assistance, $100 million.

V. Police Training and Anti-Crime Initiative, $800 million.

A. Police Corps, $100 million.

B. State and Local Grants for Law Enforcement—$700 million.

Total Funding, $5 billion.

I. JOB CREATION AND SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT

A. COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANTS

Community Development Block Grants are a flexible resource for creating jobs and revitalizing cities of all sizes. The funds can be used for an array of economic development, community facilities and housing rehabilitation projects. Funds under this program are targeted both to the neediest cities and the most distressed neighborhoods within these cities.

The Block Grant program is funded at $3.2 billion this year, or half a billion dollars below funding in 1981, a cut of nearly 40% after adjusting for inflation.

In October, a Conference of Mayors survey of 62 cities found that three out of four city Mayors were postponing capital improvements, or had accumulated a backlog of capital improvements, because of the recession. If these capital projects are funded now, they are capable of putting thousands of Americans back to work immediately.

Increased funding of $1.45 billion will create approximately 75,000 new construction and related service jobs. In order to expedite spending of the new money, the 15% cap on social services would be raised to 20%. In addition, cities would be required to identify off-the-shelf projects prior to receiving these funds.

B. COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

Community Development Corporations (CDCs) are on the front line of economic development in our cities. There are currently over 2000 CDCs operating nationwide. One of the first will soon celebrate its 25th anniversary—the Bedford-Stuyvesant Redevelopment Corporation in New York City, which was founded by Senators Robert Kennedy and Jacob Javits. Another of the most successful and largest CDCs is The East Los Angeles Community Union, which will play a major role in the redevelopment of the riot corridor.

America's CDCs have developed over 225,000 units of housing, with over 90% going to low income occupants. They have developed over 17,000,000 square feet of business space in economically distressed communities. They are responsible for the creation and retention of nearly 90,000 jobs in the past five years.

CDCs provide not only job training and job opportunities, but also lasting stability by ensuring that impoverished areas develop the anchors that middle class areas take for granted—including strong community organizations, well-stocked stores, corner banks, thriving local businesses, safe parks and decent housing.

After substantial cuts in 1981, annual funding for CDCs has stagnated at $30 million. An increase of $100 million for fiscal year 1992 will more than quadruple this worthwhile and severely underfunded program.

C. SUMMER YOUTH (JTPA)

The unemployment effects of the recession have had a harsh impact on young people, particularly disadvantaged youth in the nation's cities. In many urban centers, the unemployment rate among black youth is almost 50%. Some studies have shown a relationship between early work experience and future labor market success.

Job training opportunities for youth have dramatically diminished during the 1980s, with a FY93 appropriation that is less than 75% of the 1981 appropriation in nominal dollars. With the cost of inflation, we are currently serving only half as many young people—about 530,000 annually—as a decade ago. (There are approximately 4 million young people who meet the eligibility criteria for the Summer Youth Program.)

This proposal would double the size of the current program and provide desperately needed job opportunities to an additional 675,000 inner city youth. It is a substantial down-payment on the promise of a summer job for every eligible youth.

D. NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE

National and Community Service is an easily expandable program that can provide thousands of quality meaningful employment opportunities in cities for youth aged 15 to 25. Such opportunities provide a unique double-benefit. They restore a sense of purpose and civic responsibility in the lives of young people who serve—a sense of purpose and responsibility that studies have shown will stay with them for the rest of their lives. They also generate millions of hours of service in needy communities.

The National Service Commission already awards grants to applicants seeking to involve youth from diverse backgrounds in community service. In 1992, the Commission received nearly 500 applications from 48 states. However, due to its extremely limited resources, the Commission was forced to deny funding to two-thirds of the high-quality proposals it received. These applications represent untapped blueprints—ready for immediate implementation—for engaging young Americans in jobs, and addressing critical needs in communities that have been unmet for the past decades.

These kinds of programs already have an excellent track record in a challenging urban environment. By providing an additional $150 million, thousands of opportunities will be created immediately for young people to meaningfully serve their neglected, overlooked communities.

II. EDUCATIONAL INVESTMENT

A. HEAD START, SUMMER PROGRAM

The Head Start program has a longstanding undisputed track record of success. Currently more than 625,000 low-income children (28% of eligibles) and their families benefit from receiving these critically important comprehensive Head Start services. However, most Head Start children do not receive either full day or full year services. During the 1980's, the Head Start cost-per-child was reduced by 15% in order to serve more with less.

The plan includes $500 million to enable the Head Start program to continue to offer comprehensive services through the summer months. These funds would be available to currently operating Head Start programs which are able to extend their operations, and would serve approximately 400,000 low-income children. In addition, Head Start programs which receive these funds would be required to extend their family literacy projects and agree to employ participants in the summer youth employment program as apprentices in each of their classrooms.

B. CHAPTER I, SUMMER PROGRAM

Chapter 1 education funds currently serve five million students in 14,000 local school systems across the country. They provide smaller classes in reading and math for low-achieving students in poor neighborhoods. Nearly 10% of the current $6.6 billion appropriation is set aside for concentration grants to counties with higher numbers of low income students.

National evaluations show achievement gains in all grades, especially in the early grades. The gap between disadvantaged students and more advantaged students also has narrowed.

The plan includes an additional $1 billion of Chapter 1 funding to run programs, beginning in the summer, for children in Chapter I concentration districts. Once appropriated, the funds will be available until expended. To target the most disadvantaged students, 25% of grants should go to Local Education Agencies (LEAs) with enrollments of 100,000 or more students, 50% of LEAs with enrollments of 200,000 to 100,000 students, and 25% to LEAs with enrollment below 20,000.

III. IMPROVED AVAILABILITY OF BASIC HEALTH SERVICES

A. COMMUNITY HEALTH CENTERS

The dramatic rise in the uninsured, Medicaid cutbacks, and the financially strained condition of inner-city hospitals have made timely health care increasingly unavailable to inner-city residents. This initiative will add $100 million to the current $530 million budget of the Community Health Centers programs, enough to provide services to 800,000 people. This program delivers comprehensive out-patient health services through a network of more than 600 clinics nationwide.

B. NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

The National Health Service Corps places primary care physicians, nurses, and other health professionals in "medically underserved" areas, including inner-cities. The additional $100 million funds will continue the restoration of the cuts that were made during the Reagan-Bush years and assures a steady supply of health personnel to needy areas.

IV. FEMA EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

The FEMA emergency assistance program was established by the 1983 JOBS bill as a temporary measure. Nearly, a decade later the program is serving ever growing numbers of the homeless and hungry.

Assistance under this program is delivered through local coalitions of human services agencies. Cities receive these funds based on their unemployment rates. Administrative expenses cannot exceed 1%. As a result, the dollars get out quickly and find their way directly to the neediest citizens.

This program is currently funded at $175 million dollars. An additional $100 million should be appropriated to meet immediate needs for food and shelter.

V. POLICE TRAINING AND ANTI-CRIME INITIATIVE

A. POLICE CORPS

The plan proposes to authorize and appropriate funding for the Police Corps, starting at $100 million for the coming summer. This program will allow college graduates to pay off their federal student loans by serving in local police departments for four years. More police will be put on the streets in local communities, and the program will bring increased diversity and more college-educated recruits directly into state and local police departments.

B. STATE AND LOCAL GRANTS FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT

This funding will assist state and local law enforcement through the Edward Byrne Memorial Program, administered by the Department of Justice. 95% of the funds under the program are distributed through formula block grants, with the remaining funds distributed through Justice Department discretionary grants. The current appropriations level is $704 million. The Bush Administration has requested $588 million for next year, and the plan will provide an additional $700 million. Particular emphasis will be placed on ensuring that each state or local agency receiving funds has appropriate police conduct training in place that focuses on reducing excessive force and enhancing cultural understanding among law enforcement officers and employees.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE].

Mr. WELLSTONE. The Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Colorado were kind enough to give me a few minutes.

I thank Senator KENNEDY from Massachusetts for his statement. I am proud to serve in the Senate with him because I think he has been a giant in this whole struggle for civil rights and human rights and opportunities for all our citizens. It was an eloquent statement and I think it was very important. I certainly wish to be included as an original cosponsor of his proposal.

Mr. President, let me follow up on the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts with one Minnesota story, and a report on a meeting I went to today that I think is relevant and should be reported on the floor.

Minnesota's story, phoned to me here from my office in Minnesota: One young white girl, age 9, went out in her block and, with chalk, wrote on a sidewalk about what is happening in our country: "Without justice there can be no peace." Her neighbor, an African-American black girl, age 9, could not read what was on the sidewalk. That tells us so much about our country and how much we still have to do.

Mr. President, I want to report to you on a meeting I attended today on M Street here in Washington, DC, at the Metropolitan AME Church, which, interestingly enough, the great black abolitionist Frederick Douglass actually attended. This was a gathering that Mayor Kelly hosted. Rev. Jesse Jackson brought people together from around the country. And the interesting thing is that the focus was in two areas. No. 1, the focus was on voter registration, on people, young people especially, exerting their political rights in behalf of their economic rights. And No. 2, a very positive focus, was really on the kinds of things Senator KENNEDY was talking about. The focus was on jobs; it was on education; it was on opportunity; and it was on investing in our own communities.

Mr. President, I have to tell you I am committed one way or another to bringing back the whole question of whether or not we are going to waive the budget agreement, not spend more as a Nation but at least redirect some of our resources into our own communities. I think it is time we understand that part of the definition of real national security is going to be the security of local communities where there are jobs, where there is housing, where there is education and where there is opportunity.

There are some people from Rushford, MN, here today and I have to tell you that these economic issues are also real, compelling rural issues.

The fact that poor people and people who are struggling in rural areas might be more hidden does not make the poverty any less real.

I want to just make it clear. We have much to do in our country by way of investment in rural America, as well.

A final point, Mr. President, because I promised that I would be brief.

The interesting thing about this gathering today at the Metropolitan A.M.E. Church was there was a focus on a call to action. The mayors' march on May 16, is going to be so important, and will follow up by events on June 19, which will be a national day of protest, with massive efforts on voter registration, massive focus on these domestic issues, saying to people in our country, especially the people that live in the cities that do not have the hope: There are alternatives.

St Augustine said: Hope has two lovely daughters: Anger and Courage. The anger at what is wrong, and the courage to know that we can change it.

I think that is what we need in our country today—the politics of courage, the politics of caring, and the politics of investment in our communities and in our people.

I thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

TELEPHONE PRIVACY ACT OF 1991

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL].

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I am delighted that S. 652, the Telephone Privacy Act of 1991, is finally before the Senate. I want to express my appreciation to the majority leader and his staff for helping us get to it.

AMENDMENT NO. 1794

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, at this point, I send a committee substitute to the desk, and ask unanimous consent that it be treated as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my legal fellow, Geraldine Pamela Welikson, a distinguished and celebrated third-year law student at Washington University, be granted privileges of the floor during the debate on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, once again, American ingenuity has developed new technology. This new device is known as caller ID. It will change the way we use the telephone.

Caller ID is really very simple. When your phone rings, caller ID displays on the screen the number of the person placing the call. If you recognize the number, then you obviously know who is calling. Based on that information, you can decide whether or not to answer the telephone.

Caller ID is already being offered in a variety of jurisdictions, including Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia. It will soon be in place in many more States. Indeed, this technology is developing so rapidly that some telephone companies soon expect to offer caller ID services that display the name of the person calling you, as well as their telephone number.

In my judgment, caller ID is a welcome development. It can tell us who is calling without requiring us to talk to the caller, and it can allow people to decide if they want to take the call before picking up the telephone. As a result of this feature, caller ID will enhance our privacy.

But in my view, caller ID has the potential to invade our privacy. Telephone companies will be able to force our phone numbers to be displayed every time we make a call, even if we have an unlisted number or if we do not want people to know from where we are calling.

In addition, since recipients of calls know the numbers of the persons calling them, they can use a device known as a "reverse directory" and easily obtain the caller's name and address. Forced caller ID without any restriction, therefore, can give the person you are calling your name, your phone number, and your address, whether you want them to have it or not.

Mr. President, I believe that this unrestricted caller ID violates our fundamental right to privacy. For example, people have the right to call a crisis hot line or a telephone marketer or even the IRS to ask for help without saying who they are and where they live. Senators and other public figures should be able to call the Washington Post, whose reporters have caller ID on all of their phones, without revealing their home phone numbers and addresses. And consumers should be able to call a business and ask for information without being compelled to identify themselves. In my judgment, there is no justification for such forced disclosure.

Yet, every time—with unrestricted caller ID—every time you place a call to any person or organization for any reason, you will disclose a lot of information about yourself, whether you wanted to or not.

In addition to privacy concerns, there are practical problems with caller ID without restriction. It can be dangerous. Consider just a few examples. Undercover officers sometimes call drug dealers from precincts to arrange buys. If a target recognizes where the call comes from, it could ruin the bust, or even worse, result in the death of an agent. And battered women often take refuge with friends, but call home to check on things. If their spouses know where they are staying, then further abuse could result.

The point is simply this: Phone companies cannot determine when it is safe to reveal our numbers and addresses. There are too many variables that even phone companies cannot perceive.

Fortunately, I believe there is a simple way to realize the benefits of caller ID and avoid its potential problems: Just allow consumers to retain their freedom of choice; let us decide when we want to reveal our phone numbers and when we do not.

The technology exists to give us that choice. It is known as per-call blocking. Per-call blocking works this way. When you want to make a call without revealing your number, you simply press a few digits on the phone and the display of your number is blocked. With this per-call blocking option, people can display their numbers when calling friends and family, and they can keep their phone number confidential when they want to.

A growing number of phone companies and a growing number of States have recognized the importance of protecting their caller's right to privacy, and offer a blocking option.

But in order to ensure that all telephone customers retain this crucial freedom of choice, we introduced the Telephone Privacy Act of 1991. It would require that telephone companies that offer caller ID give callers, at a minimum, the option of free per-call blocking. In that way, consumers can block the display of their telephone numbers.

To accommodate States which have already considered this issue, the bill "grandfathers in" State laws and regulations which authorize per-line blocking if a State has such a system in place at the time that S. 652 is enacted.

To address the special problems of battered women shelters, the bill requires telephone companies to offer additional privacy safeguards for them.

In addition, this legislation will prevent potential abuses by 800 and 900 phone services. As a result of these simple steps, the bill protects the privacy of callers, while ensuring the value of the caller ID service.

It would also move the caller ID technology toward a uniform Federal standard rather than a patchwork of inconsistent State laws.

Mr. President, our approach, centered on requiring free per-call blocking, makes sense. It balances our desire for privacy with our desire to see the caller ID technology developed.

Just as important, Mr. President, is the fact that per-call blocking does not reduce the value of caller ID. Let me give you a few examples. First, blocking will not reduce law enforcement's ability to deter obscene and harassing phone calls.

In fact, the telephone technology that makes caller ID possible also makes it possible to stop telephone terrorists without in any way undermining the privacy of law-abiding citizens.

We all know that a few telephone companies market caller ID as the only way to reduce obscene and harassing phone calls, but that is false advertising. The truth is that we have the technology and, with this bill, the ability to protect victims and ensure privacy at the same time. And here is how: Built into the software which makes caller ID operate are other capabilities. For example, there is "call trace," which allows a victim of an abusive call to automatically forward the number of the call to the authorities merely by dialing a three-digit code.

Then, there is "call return," which allows the recipient to automatically redial the number of the person who just called.

Finally, there is "call reject," which allows an individual to block all calls to his or her phone from a particular line, forever preventing calls from a telephone harasser.

So with the use of these three services—call trace, call reject, and call return—harassing phone callers will be caught. Best of all, Mr. President, these protective services work even when a number is blocked, and you do not have to subscribe to caller ID to use them. In virtually every State in which caller ID is available, telephone companies offer these services to everyone, whether they have caller ID or not.

Second, far from reducing the value of caller ID, this legislation is essential to securing its future. Right now, there are serious questions being raised about the legality of caller ID. Most experts, including the Congressional Research Service, concluded that caller ID is a "trap and trace device that violates Federal law." Last month, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court agreed. The court ruled that caller ID violated a provision in the Pennsylvania wiretap statute, which is identical to a provision in the Federal version. At least one State PUC may go a step further by banning the service entirely.

This legislation would resolve the ambiguities in our statutes and ensure the legality of caller ID. It would prohibit States from making caller ID illegal.

Finally, there is one more reason to pass this legislation. Per-call blocking already exists, but only for the wealthy. There is a new 900 service that charges people a few dollars a minute and allows them to place their calls through a third-party intermediary. It is the intermediary's number which is displayed. The recipient of the call never gets to see the phone number of the person actually making the call. The existence of such a service supports the essential thrust of this bill. There are times when you do not want someone you are calling to have your number. But the existence of such a service is also wrong, because blocking should be a matter of equity as well as privacy. Phone companies should make it available to everyone, rich and poor alike.

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee favorably reported this measure by a 10-to-1 vote. That is not surprising, because it is a joint product of the committee. Senators LEAHY, BROWN, and BIDEN have all contributed to it and deserve special praise.

But since that time, we have made, I believe, several important improvements. At the request of Senator THURMOND, we have authorized the use of caller ID by most governmental entities, so that they can receive the benefits of this valuable technology. We have also removed the requirement that telephone companies provide blocking from pay phones in order to deter harassing calls from phone booths. At the suggestion of Senator METZENBAUM, we have provided consumers with greater flexibility by requiring telephone companies to offer call trace for a charge wherever they offer caller ID. Before this debate concludes, I will place a more detailed statement describing these modifications in the RECORD.

The final legislation now before the Senate is clearly a compromise, but it is a fair and a balanced compromise. Simply put, without compromise, we would not have legislation, and without Federal legislation, we would not protect telephone privacy at all in States like New Jersey, Virginia, Indiana, Mississippi, as well as other States that permit caller ID but do not permit blocking.

In conclusion, Mr. President, our bill allows us to expand the use of caller ID while protecting the privacy rights of individuals. We ensure caller ID can expand by making it clear that it is legal under Federal wiretap laws. We protect privacy by ensuring that callers, when they want, will have the right to withhold their numbers, and we allow vigorous pursuit of obscene and harassing phone callers.

Mr. President, a wide variety of groups endorse this legislation. We have endorsements from the Consumer Federation of America, the American Civil Liberties Union, and Public Citizen. We have endorsements from Ameritech and the Fraternal Order of Police. While AT&T, MCI, and Sprint may still have a few concerns about the bill, they are not opposing the substitute we are offering today.

It is, Mr. President, a balanced bill. It is a bill that we need, and I hope very much it is a bill that we will pass.

Now, before I yield to my colleague from Colorado, Senator BROWN, I want to say what a pleasure it has been working with him and how much I appreciate the special efforts he has put into this legislation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be agreed to and that the reported committee substitute, as thus amended, remain amendable in two degrees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] in cosponsoring the Telephone Privacy Act of 1991. I congratulate Senator KOHL and his staff on the fine job they have done on this important and necessary legislation.

S. 652 governs the use of caller ID and similar services. It amends the Federal wiretap statute to ensure that caller ID service will not be found to be an illegal trap and trace device within the meaning of that statute.

The bill strikes a balance between the uses of new technology like caller ID and similar services and the privacy interest of persons making calls to prevent disclosure of their numbers.

This legislation is necessary. A recent decision by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court found that caller ID was an illegal wiretap under the State wiretap statute. The Pennsylvania law is based on the Federal statute.

This is a difficult area and one subject to continued technological advances, but I believe the bill succeeds in striking an appropriate balance between the interests involved.

The bill exempts caller ID from the prohibition on trap and trace devices contained in section 3121 of title 18 provided certain conditions are met.

The bill requires phone companies offering caller ID to also provide the originator of a call with free per-call blocking. This is a service which permits the caller to prevent his number from being revealed to a recipient of a call who has caller ID.

The bill requires phone companies to provide per-line blocking at no charge in States which have acted to require free per-line blocking to the enactment of this legislation.

Phone companies are also required to provide per line blocking at no charge and upon request to victims of domestic violence that are protected by a court order, battered women's shelters or other organizations providing safe haven for victims of domestic violence.

The bill does not require a telephone company to provide the blocking feature on calls made to emergency assistance lines, calls within private systems or calls from public telephones. This feature of the bill ensures that emergency lines will be able to provide immediate responses where a call might otherwise be inadvertently blocked.

The second condition requires phone companies to permit the recipient of a phone call to use call trace. This is a service which permits the recipient of an obscene or harassing phone call to refer the number of the caller to the phone company's security department for further action in conjunction with the appropriate law enforcement authorities.

The call trace service cannot be blocked, so even if a harassing caller has tried to block his number when placing the call, his number will be revealed to the authorities. This feature should go a long way to discourage obscene and harassing phone calls.

Further in this regard, the bill specifically notes that it is not the intent of the Senate to either endorse or facilitate the use of blocking of caller ID by originators of obscene or harassing telephone calls, nor is it the Senate's intent to limit the enforcement of laws prohibiting these types of phone calls.

The third condition permits governmental entities to use caller ID except on lines publicized or represented as providing confidentiality as to the identity of the caller. Governmental entities must also publish notice that they are using caller ID and describe the intent and scope of their use of the service.

This aspect of the bill serves to protect the identity of those calling medical hot lines, tax compliance lines or other lines where the caller generally does not want their identity revealed. We have drawn the exception to governmental use narrowly. We wanted to protect privacy interests while at the same time ensuring that governmental entities may make use of these new technologies to improve the delivery of their services to the public.

As a fourth condition, S. 652 also exempts from the wiretap statute the so-called automatic number identification service or ANI. ANI functions similarly to caller ID but on 800 and 900 lines only. ANI subscribers, such as mail order houses, may use the information they obtain on callers for internal billing, routing and other similar purposes. But these ANI subscribers may not resell or distribute the information they compile without the prior consent of the caller.

In this respect, the privacy of callers is protected and the information regarding their purchasing habits is maintaining only by those companies with which they have done business. This feature of the bill is intended to provide callers with an enhanced degree of control over the distribution of private and sometimes sensitive information to tele-marketers and other similar entities.

The bill provides for a civil private right of action where: First, the phone company fails to provide caller ID as required in the bill; second, caller ID is provided on a government line which is publicized as being confidential; or third, ANI subscribers are found to have misused the ANI information.

This bill represents important legislation. It is the result of intensive negotiations between the local telephone companies, the long distance carriers, State public utility commissions and public interest and privacy advocates.

Passage of this bill will ensure that caller ID and related services are provided throughout the States in a manner that ensures for the consumer a predictable and uniform expectation of privacy.

Mr. President, to summarize, this is a good bill, because it is a well-thought-out, well-reasoned measure. Senator KOHL has led the effort to develop thoughtful legislation in this area. I want to share briefly with the body why we need a bill. I think, as Members watch these deliberations, the first question they may inquire about is why in the world do we have to fix this when we are not sure it is broken? I will share my view on that particular subject. First of all, the reason we need this is that there is an enormous amount of new technology in this area that simply has not been dealt with under current law. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Senator KOHL, has alluded to these new technologies in his opening statement. Let me outline them again very quickly.

Caller ID is now available in several States. It was not available in the past. Call blocking is now available, both per call and per line. Call return is now available. Call trace is now available. Call reject is now available.

Mr. President, our Federal statutes need to take these new and emerging technologies and services into account and interrelate them, so you can treat people fairly and deal with the existing prohibitions that now stand on the books.

Mr. President, the second reason we need this bill is the Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision on this subject. What the Pennsylvania decision has done is interpret a Pennsylvania statute that also is similar to the Federal wire tap statute. That decision simply deemed caller ID to be an illegal tap and trace device under the Pennsylvania wiretap statute. Mr. President, caller ID is a valuable service. We must ensure that it remains lawful. Therefore, we must take the Pennsylvania decision into account in adjusting the Federal wiretap statute. For these two reasons, Mr. President, this is necessary legislation.

The second question I would like to address very briefly—and it may occur to some Members as they listen to this—is why in the world a person would want to be able to withhold his or her number from the called party? If you are going to call somebody, why would you not be willing to let the called party identify your number if he or she chooses to? Let us look at that. Let us say, if you call a store to find out when it closes, or an airplane to find out if you can get a ticket, do you really want the store or the airline to have your name and phone number on a junk mail list? Well, some may not mind that, but some may, and we—and not the phone company—ought to have the right to make that decision. Let us say you are a doctor, or an attorney, or another that provides professional services. If a patient or client can find out your home phone number and your home address when you return his or her call, you may not be willing to call every time that you may be needed. Thus, call blocking simply provides a useful privacy option. Or let us say you want to call a crisis hot line for help, you do not necessarily want them to know who you are; or, let us say you are a reporter who calls a source from home, you may not want that source to know the way to your own doorstep; or, let us say you are an undercover narcotics agent who arranges a drug buy over the phone, you may not want the target to know your true identify. The simple fact is these new technologies provide enormous options that we have not always had in the past. We need to think them through carefully.

Mr. President, I think that is the value of this bill. Mr. President, this legislation reflects Senator KOHL's willingness to listen to a broad spectrum of interested parties. It is thoughtful, reasonable legislation that strikes a reasonable balance between the uses of new technology like caller ID and similar services and the privacy interest of persons making calls to prevent disclosure of their numbers.

The measure was reported out of the subcommittee unanimously. It was reported out of the Judiciary Committee on a 10 to 1 vote. While not everyone is an endorser or enthusiastic supporter of this measure, frankly, I think those who have taken a great deal of time to think about it and look at it will find their reasonable concerns and objectives have been addressed and incorporated into the bill.

Mr. President, I am proud to join with Senator KOHL as a cosponsor of this measure.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I rise to express some concerns I have about this legislation that is before the Senate. I, first of all, want to compliment the distinguished managers of the bill for trying to craft a compromise to deal with some of the objections to the legislation as reported by the Judiciary Committee.

There are still serious concerns about the bill: For example, whether or not legislation in this form is necessary to put before the Senate today. The Federal Communications Commission is given authority by law to regulate interstate communications services that are offered by telephone companies throughout the United States. At the present time I understand that the Federal Communications Commission is undertaking a rulemaking to deal with the very issues addressed in this legislation. My inclination is to permit the FCC to proceed without obstructing or trying to impede or direct or mandate the direction in which that rulemaking proceeds.

The reason we create an agency like the FCC to begin with recognizes that this Congress does not have the staffing, expertise, the procedures that enable it to make decisions of this kind that are very technical, that require an awful lot of research of technology, or understanding of technology, and the countrywide impact on the competitive relationships between industries, the impact on consumers, and those who use the services, to be sure that their rights are safeguarded in every possible respect.

Senators are not experts in the communications field. Senators would have a very difficult time trying to make a correct decision on technical issues of this kind and still discharge the other duties and responsibilities that we each have in a wide range of other subject matter areas. That is why the FCC is entrusted with the power to make rules, make determinations, and issue regulations on questions of this kind.

So I would urge the Senate to refrain from enacting a law on this subject at this time. It is premature for the Senate to legislate on this issue in the detail and in the area of communications minutia that we are being asked to do today in this bill.

There is one other concern that I have and it is a serious concern that has already been shared with the committee, and that is the fact that State regulatory agencies have the responsibility under our Federal system to regulate intrastate communications services. These public service commissions or regulatory bodies in every State have been reviewing this technology, have been hearing witnesses, have been trying to come to grips with how best to protect the interest both of consumers and customers, to be sure that privacy is protected, and to be sure that we are able to take advantage of new technologies like caller ID.

Twenty-three States have, through their regulatory agencies, authorized the providing of caller ID services. Some have elected to require the call-blocking service as well. That was described by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

Some have not provided the call-blocking service. I am advised that in my State of Mississippi, for example, the caller ID service is available but the call-blocking service is not required to be made available. Few complaints by the Public Service Commission have been received in our State, I am told. In the committee report a letter or a copy of the letter addressed to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] was printed at his request as a part of his additional views on this subject. The chairman of the Vermont Public Service Board, the State regulatory agency, had this to say about this legislation.

> States have taken their responsibilities seriously on this question. The various State commissions have been able to benefit from each other's investigations into the privacy and public safety aspects of caller ID services. This is not an issue that requires or suggests the need for Federal preemption of State legislative or regulatory actions. Federal preemption of State authority for caller ID's blocking capability is clearly unnecessary at this time. It is also unwise both as a matter of federalism and as a matter of service and technology deployment.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the legislation before us is symptomatic of a problem we have in Congress at this time. Some see every instance when we perceive a need or a problem it must be solved by Federal regulation or Federal legislation. I disagree with that precept.

I really think we are making a big mistake, particularly in the scientific and technological areas, if we as an institution presume to be experts in every instance and to be capable and competent to legislate an answer to every question that arises in the use of new technologies, particularly communications, and telecommunications technology. We position ourselves as both judge, and jury, high and mighty arbiters over every dispute that arises between competing forces in our society, between consumers and business interests, and industries like this, the telephone industry and its customers.

There are already established regulatory procedures and bodies entrusted with the authority of law to do these things that we today are being asked to do in the U.S. Senate. I really feel that we are making a mistake to continue to intrude into these areas already under the jurisdiction of some other competent body, much more competent in terms of experience, knowledge of the subject matter, closeness to the situation and to the people affected by the law or regulation that will be enacted or promulgated, than we are here in the U.S. Senate.

So here we are in a situation where Senators are not prepared, on the basis of background, experience, or knowledge, to make a decision of this kind, and we are being asked to legislate, enact a statute that directs, in effect, the Federal Communications Commission and State regulatory bodies how to judge issues now before them which are being dealt with and have been dealt with, in many instances already, in what may prove to be a perfectly satisfactory way.

I have talked to some Senators about their knowledge of this caller ID issue and how it has been handled in their various States. In some States already, such as Virginia, steps have been taken by the local telephone companies to provide the very services that we are legislating now be required nationwide. Why do we need to legislate what already is being done?

I just saw in the paper here in a Washington Post article, "C&P Offers Virginia Caller ID Users an Unbeatable Block." And the article describes the service that this legislation requires to be made available. Well, now why do we need the law? If the companies are doing what the law suggests they ought to do, I do not see why we need to clutter up the Federal statute books with judgments that we are being asked to make on how a telephone company should provide service to its customers.

Obviously, there is a need for this kind of service, there is a demand for this kind of service, and it is being made available. And in States where it is not being made available, the pressures on the local regulatory bodies and on the local service providers will become such that those services will be made available.

I noticed in the Legislative Notice made available to all Republican Senators describing the Telephone Privacy Act, the summary of the bill, and a notation that the administration opposes the passage of S. 652. I am going to read from this notice.

> Federal legislation on Caller ID is unnecessary. * * * For interstate service, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) already has authority to regulate Caller ID. In fact, the FCC is now conducting a rulemaking on Caller ID that addresses the concerns underlying S. 652. On the local level, the States are using a variety of approaches in determining the conditions under which Caller ID should be offered in their jurisdictions. These different approaches are providing valuable information and experience in developing this service and should be permitted to continue.

I am persuaded that it is premature for the Senate to act today on this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, May 5, 1992]

C&P OFFERS VIRGINIA CALLER ID USERS AN UNBEATABLE BLOCK

(By Mark Potts)

If a telephone call is the next best thing to being there, then Chesapeake & Potomac Co. has come up with the next best thing to not calling at all.

Closing a loophole in its Caller ID service, C&P yesterday introduced a service in Virginia that will automatically hang up on any caller who tries to circumvent Caller ID. The new service known as anonymous call rejection, also could be available to C&P customers in Maryland and the District within a few months, pending regulatory approval.

Caller ID, which has been available locally for about two years, provides a customer with an electronic display that shows the phone number of the person making a call to the customer.

C&P Telephone and other phone companies have marketed the service as a way to screen unwanted calls or learn the identity of prank or obscene callers. About 341,000 of the 17.9 million East Coast customers of C&P's parent company, Bell Atlantic Corp., subscribe to Caller ID, for which they are charged a $6.50 monthly fee, plus the cost of the display device.

But Caller ID can be overridden by the caller by pressing *67 before dialing the number. Instead of displaying the number at the other end of the line, the Caller ID device then shows a message saying the call is "private." Some critics have seen this service as defeating the purpose of Caller ID, since it allows unwanted callers to hide under this "private"guise.

But not anymore. Caller ID users or any other C&P customers in Virginia who want to block such "private" calls can dial *77 to subscribe to the anonymous call rejection service. The service will automatically screen calls and disconnect any made using the "private" prefix; the caller will hear a message saying that the party being called does not accept such calls.

The service, which can also be activated on a rotary phone by dialing 1177, is free for any Caller ID customer and will cost other customers $3 a month.

C&P of Virginia is one of the first phone companies in the nation to offer anonymous call rejection. State regulators approved the service last week, and C&P officials say they will ask for approval by Maryland and District regulators.

There is some irony to Virginia's approval of the system: State regulators have not allowed C&P of Virginia to give customers the option of making "private" calls to Caller ID users in the first place, although Virginia customers still can receive such calls from elsewhere.

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I have great respect for the Senator from Mississippi. However, in this case, I believe that he is not on the right track.

The fact is that neither the FCC nor the State can adequately regulate caller ID for at least two reasons. On the one hand, the FCC can only regulate interstate calls and not intrastate calls. So it cannot protect the telephone privacy of people in States like New Jersey and Indiana which do not permit any sort of blocking by the caller and it cannot move the States toward more uniform privacy protections as our bill does.

And on the other hand, the States cannot protect the privacy of interstate callers. Travelers therefore would have to carry a list of which States recognize telephone privacy and which do not. And because not every State will require blocking, we need to ensure that callers in every State have their privacy protected.

More than that, before we go any further with caller ID, we have to make sure that it is legal under Federal law. Neither the FCC nor the States can do that. In fact, last month the Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled that caller ID violates a provision of that State's wiretap statutes which is identical to the Federal wiretap statute. This proposal would resolve the ambiguities in our Federal wiretap statutes and ensure the legality of caller ID and move us toward a uniform national privacy policy in this area.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I wonder if I might have the attention of the managers of the bill on one provision? There is in the substitute amendment per-call blocking on each individual call contrasted with the House version which has per-line blocking. I believe the provision of the Senate bill is far preferable to the provision in the House bill.

I would inquire of the managers of the bill on my own behalf, but I would represent at the same time that I think there are many other Senators who are interested in seeing to it that the Senate version on this issue stands in conference.

My inquiry of the distinguished managers would be their statement as to how important they feel this is and their own statement of firmness in conference on standing by this particular point in the Senate bill.

Mr. KOHL. Well, I personally feel that per-call blocking is a very important part of this legislation. I myself would feel very uneasy about per-line blocking, and I would intend to fight just as strongly as I can for per-call blocking as I think that is an essential part of the legislation.

Mr. SPECTER. I would agree with the distinguished principal sponsor of the bill, and I am glad to hear those assurances of his own firmness and determination to see that per-call blocking survives the conference in contrast with the House version.

If I might have the attention of the distinguished manager on the Republican side as to the same line of inquiry, the degree of firmness you have, Senator BROWN, as to the per-call blocking as opposed to per-line blocking.

Mr. BROWN. I want to assure the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania that I share the view that has just been announced by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. As manager of the bill for this side, I share the sentiment of the distinguished floor manager for the majority, that we should hold firm in conference on these important issues.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Colorado and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin for those assurances.

It seems to me that if we are going to have a national standard, aside from the limited grandfathering which is present here, and if we are going to have caller identification be meaningful, it has to be exercised when the caller wants to have his or her identity concealed on an individual basis. I concur with the managers that that is a good compromise. The recipient will know who is calling unless there is a specific exercise of privacy on an individual call basis.

But, given that value, the Senate version, I believe, has the appropriate approach: if the caller, the person placing the call, wishes to exercise his or her confidentiality, it must be made on a per-call basis and not per line. Therefore, the Senate version ought to prevail in conference, there ought to be this statement, and I think others may add their comments to the RECORD before consideration of the bill is concluded.

I thank my colleagues.

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President I wanted to address just briefly the very thoughtful comments by the Senator from Mississippi. He, I think, has made an argument that I long thought had great validity and applies to many areas—not simply telephones—and that is a concern that we not necessarily try and regulate everything from Washington, DC.

It is an appropriate argument. It is appropriate to bring it up. I think it is a valid concern.

In this particular circumstance, however, I am convinced there is some need for a uniform rule here. Let me share why. We are dealing with a wide variety of interdependent technologies. Caller ID in my view, is inextricably linked to call blocking, which involves the ability to decide not to pick up the phone when you see whoever is calling has blocked your identification. This is not simple. It is quite involved. It is a difficult area in which to ensure all options to individuals.

For example, let us assume this. The caller ID might be invalid in one State, might be illegal, might be thought of as wiretapping. An adjacent State may think it is just fine. What could happen? A paradoxical and disparate result could result. Even if it is illegal to use caller ID in one State—thus precluding access to the phone number information of the calling party—the same information could be available to the recipient of phone calls made on 1–800 or 1–900 lines through the service known as automatic number identification ID. This service is already available.

The simple fact is, this is truly interstate commerce in the most direct, in the most logical sense of the word. We cannot hope to give total State sovereignty. To begin with, the FCC regulates part of this in the interstate calls. Calls within the State indeed could be regulated by the State. But because we have interdependent technology, because we have options for the various people providing phone services as to where they locate, to have a wide variety of rules in this area invites a simple nightmare with regard to the rights of the individuals.

For those who have that concern, I would hope they would take the time to go through the details of the bill and evaluate for themselves the manner in which we have reasonably balanced, I believe, the competing privacy interests of the calling and called parties.

This measure is quite creative. It goes to significant lengths in an effort to protect individual rights and individual options. The miraculous thing is the tremendous ability of technology to protect those rights. I think anyone who goes through this in detail will be immediately impressed with how the rights of the individual caller are protected to a maximum degree.

So, are there problems to going to the one rule and trying to make uniform standards? Absolutely. But this is an area where I think most Members, as they take a look at the technologies involved and the rules involved, will agree that the only logical conclusion is that you have to come up with some common way of dealing with these issues.

AMENDMENT NO. 1795

(Purpose: To restore an enforceable Federal death penalty, to curb the abuse of habeas corpus, to reform the exclusionary rule, to combat criminal violence involving firearms, and for other purposes)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator THURMOND, Senator DOLE, and others I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] (for himself, Mr. THURMOND, and Mr. DOLE) proposes an amendment numbered 1795.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1796 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1795

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BIDEN, I would like to send this amendment to the desk please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL], for Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1796 to amendment 1795.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, 1,049 days ago, President Bush sent to the Congress a comprehensive anticrime bill and 1,049 days later that comprehensive crime bill is still stuck in a partisan gridlock denying the American people something that they desperately want.

Mr. President, we all know that the American Government is caught in the grips of partisanship which exists today at a level that is unprecedented in the postwar period. But nowhere is that partisanship more in evidence than on the President's crime bill.

Let me remind my colleagues what happened when the bill was considered in the House and Senate. Let me explain what I have sent to the desk, what has been sent to the desk as a second-degree amendment, and what the basic issue is that we face here.

Last year, we considered a crime bill in both the House and the Senate. Both the House and the Senate adopted very strong provisions that strengthened law enforcement, that provided stiff, minimum mandatory sentencing, and that provided the President with the strong piece of legislation he sought in order to deal with the crisis facing our bleeding Nation.

The problem was that when the bill went to conference where a very small number of Members from the House and Senate sat down together and the decisions were made by Democrats in the House and Democrats in the Senate, they dropped out all the strong provisions of the bill, the weakest provisions in most areas were adopted, and in some cases where the same provision had been adopted by both Houses of Congress, it ended up not being part of the final bill.

The crime language we ended up with after the conference, is a bill that overturns 20 Supreme Court decisions which strengthened law enforcement. A bill which, in the words of the President and 25 States attorneys general, both Republicans and Democrats, strengthens criminals' rights and weakens law enforcement.

Now, the proponents of this bill say it authorizes money for law enforcement, but not 1 penny of money is actually provided by the bill. A critic would say that in an effort to say something good about the bill, it is very cynical to say we are authorizing all this money even though the Congress underfunded the President's request for law enforcement in the last appropriations cycle.

Now, let me just review some of the provisions adopted by the Senate but that are not in the conference report.

One provision was 10 years in prison without parole for selling drugs to a minor or using a minor in drug trafficking.

Basically, the position that the Senate adopted on a voice vote said, if you sell drugs to a minor, no matter who your daddy is or how society has done you wrong, if you are arrested and convicted in the Federal system, you are going to serve 10 years in prison without parole. And if you get out of jail and you do it a second time, you are going to get life imprisonment. That provision was adopted in the Senate, but when the bill came out of conference the provision was dropped.

The Senate adopted the so-called three-time loser provision that said when a person is convicted of a violent crime or a drug felony in the Federal system on the third conviction, that person gets a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole. That provision was adopted in the Senate, strongly supported here, but when it went to conference the provision was dropped.

The Senate adopted a provision that said if you use a firearm during the commission of a violent crime or a drug felony, and you are convicted in the Federal system, you get 10 years in prison without parole for the gun violation alone. If you discharge the firearm in the commission of a violent crime or drug felony you get 20 years in prison without parole. And if you kill somebody you get a minimum mandatory sentence of life in prison, or in aggravated cases you are subject to the death penalty. That provision was adopted in the Senate. Similar provisions were adopted in the House. But when the bill was written in conference at the end of last year, those provisions were dropped.

Basically, what was done in the conference committee, was all of the provisions supported by the President that were aimed at grabbing criminals and drug thugs by the throat and not letting them go to get a better grip, ended up being dropped. We ended up with a bill that overturned at least 20 Supreme Court decisions that strengthened law enforcement.

Basically, the conference report was a hollow shell of what we had adopted in the Senate, a hollow shell as compared to what had been adopted in the House. The will of the majority in both houses ended up being circumvented.

I have tried to facilitate this debate. I want to make it clear that we notified our colleagues over a month ago that when we had an opportunity to offer this amendment, we intended to do so.

We have taken the strongest provisions from the House bill and the Senate bill and brought together the provisions either adopted by the House or adopted by the Senate that would strengthen law enforcement and that would send a very clear signal that we intend to do something about violent crime and about drug trafficking in America. That bill was introduced earlier this year as S. 2305 by Senators THURMOND, DOLE, myself, and many of our colleagues.

There is no provision in the amendment that I have sent to the desk that was not adopted last year by at least one of the two Houses of Congress except for the prison construction money. Many of these provisions have been adopted by both Houses.

The proposal that I have sent to the desk authorizes not only the funds that were in the conference report, but additionally authorizes funds for prison construction, something that is desperately needed. But let me make it clear that we are talking about authorizing money. We are not shooting with real bullets in either bill on money because appropriations provide money; authorizations represent wishful dreams.

We have been trying now for over a month to get Congress to go back to the crime bill. What has happened is that the majority has decided to drag this old dead cat conference report back out on the floor. The conference report overturns 20 Supreme Court decisions, and the U.S. Attorney General and 25 States' attorneys general of both parties have said it is a bill that strengthens criminal rights rather than strengthening law enforcement.

So what we have is the phony crime bill now as a substitute for a proposal which I have offered and which was intoduced earlier this year by Senator THURMOND and Senator DOLE and others and which is composed of the strongest provision from the House and the Senate versions of the bill.

Mr. President, it is clear to me that there is a determination by the majority to not allow us to deal with this issue. So I want to try to make it clear again that it is not my objective to try to slow up the flow of legislation. I am going to continue to offer this bill until we address this important issue.

We have the conference report which the President has said he will veto. The House passed this bill by a vote that clearly is insufficient to override that veto. The majority has not been able to get cloture on this bill and it is not going to become the law of the land because the Attorney General and 25 States' attorneys general say that it weakens the position of law enforcement.

So if that substitute is clotured or is accepted, I want my colleagues to know that this issue is not going to go away because the underlying bill is still amendable and what I would do in that case is simply allow, if we do cloture and do adopt the crime conference report, in its amendment form, if the majority, using its numbers, is able to adopt it, then it would simply become part of this bill; but at another point in the bill, I would send the same amendment to the desk and we would start the process over.

I am not going anywhere. I have the time to do this if we want to engage in it. But I do not think it is a good use of our time. I believe the time has come for us to be debating a tough anticrime bill. It is clear that the conference report which has been rejected by law enforcement officials all over the country, and which the President says he will veto, is not going to become the law of the land. So I am hopeful that we can put aside the conference report and get down to the issue of writing a real crime bill which is on the side of law enforcement and not on the side of the criminal.

I remind my colleagues that it has been 1,049 days since the President sent the crime bill to Congress. I think the time has come to act, and I urge my colleagues to reject the conference report, which the President will veto, which we have debated on many other occasions and which is offered today for one and only one purpose, and that is to try to kill the amendment that I have offered.

I want to repeat one final time. If this conference report which is offered for the purpose of killing the amendment is adopted, I will simply offer the amendment again, and if it is killed with another amendment, I will simply offer it again. I think my colleagues have the drift of what I am saying.

The basic bottom line is this: We are not going to allow the U.S. Senate to be denied to make fundamental decisions about crime and punishment in America, I hope my colleagues will support this effort. I yield the floor.

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise to speak in opposition to the pending amendment.

The underlying bill, S. 652, would protect people's telephone privacy by giving them the ability to block the display of their telephone number, thereby preventing the unauthorized use of that information. It is a simple, straightforward, and effective proposal, and one that is needed.

But at a time when the Senate is scheduled to debate legislation which insures people's telephone privacy, we find ourselves considering yet another crime bill.

Mr. President, the Senate has already debated the merits of a crime bill. And that crime bill was approved in a House-Senate conference last October. The House adopted the conference report on November 27 of last year. Since then the Senate has been unable to garner enough votes to overcome a Republican filibuster and send a crime bill to the President. In the meantime, Republicans have introduced another crime bill.

This latest crime bill today—except for the absence of the Brady bill and a difference in habeas language—is very similar to the House and Senate versions already passed. It is clear that the real motivation behind offering this amendment, and in filibustering the conference report, is not the desire to pass an effective crime bill. The true motivation—the real reason for shifting the focus of this body from a privacy bill to a crime bill—is hard and fast partisan politics.

This debate is not a debate on the merits of a crime bill, it is a sound bite debate. What we hear today will be repeated over and over until November has come and gone. And it is the public who suffers from this gamesmanship as we bicker on the Senate floor. But this is no surprise—or at least it should not be. It is an election year and this is the way things are done in an election year.

Yet, this is the type of political jousting that the American people have said they have had enough of. Partisanship does little more than ensure that public disdain for Congress will continue to grow.

Mr. President, this is not the time for debating the crime issue. The Senate has before it an important piece of legislation addressing people's privacy. The crime issue is equally important, but it is evident that we are a long way from agreeing on a crime bill. Consequently, I urge my colleagues to oppose the Gramm amendment and get on with the business at hand—passing the caller ID bill.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I understand our colleague's interest in the bill that is before us. I guess there are just a couple of responses I want to make. First of all, for over a month, we have asked for an opportunity to debate the crime bill and this is the first opportunity we have had with this amendment. I know my colleague thinks that this issue of setting out telephone rules concerning the ability of people to detect the number of the person who is calling them is of great moment but, quite frankly, I think it is kind of insignificant as compared to the crime problem that faces America.

I think, quite frankly, if you do not want somebody to know your number, there is a simple way not to let them know it: Do not call them up. Listening to the whole logic of this very complicated bill, it sounds to me like people are arguing that if somebody comes and knocks on your door and you say who is it? They can say: "Wait a minute. You don't have a right to know who I am. Just let me in your house."

There is one sure way not to let people know your telephone number and that is do not call them up. So we can fix the problem they are trying to deal with very simply. If you do not want your number known by a particular individual, do not call them. But to say that somehow this is such an important bill that we cannot consider mandatory sentencing for selling drugs to minors, mandatory sentencing for using guns in violent crimes, I think is just outrageous on its face.

So, again, I am ready to debate the crime bill. I hope that we will have an opportunity to do that. If the conference report is clotured and adopted, I simply intend to offer this again and to continue the process until ultimately we debate a bill that is a legitimate bill that the President will sign into law to deal with the problem.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in a Senate in which transparent political ploys are customary, rarely have we seen a more transparent, more political ploy than that which has just occurred.

The Senator from Texas and his colleagues have filibustered to prevent a comprehensive crime bill from passing this Chamber, going to the President, and becoming law.

A majority of the House have approved it. A majority of the Senate favor it. But because the Senate rules are such that permit a minority to prevent the will of the majority from being effected, that permits a minority to stop the Senate from acting on comprehensive crime control legislation that within hours would do something meaningful about the serious problem of crime confronting people in urban areas all across the country.

Now, they recognize the political vulnerability of filibustering and preventing a comprehensive crime bill from being enacted into law, and so to create confusion, to obscure what is really happening, we have this transparent political ploy of bringing this yet another new Republican crime bill here, as though it is the only crime bill, as though fighting crime is a franchise, a monopoly of our colleagues.

The reality is, Mr. President, if anyone here is serious about crime, they will stop filibustering, stop using these tactics, and permit this comprehensive crime control legislation, that has already been approved by the House and now only needs final action by the Senate at this time, and it could be on the President's desk in a matter of hours—it is that which is occurring here, and it is that of which every American should be aware. A determined minority, unwilling to deal seriously with the problem, now engages in a transparent political ploy to give the impression that someone else is responsible, that someone else is preventing action.

So, Mr. President, we are going to debate crime. We ought to be debating crime. We have debated it hundreds of hours, and it is our colleagues on the Republican side who have filibustered to prevent action from occurring. That is what has happened. That is what has happened right until now.

Now, we have on the calendar crime legislation that has already passed the House, and all it takes is a vote here in the Senate. We could vote at 5:30 tonight, within one-half hour, and it would be on the President's desk in one-half hour. If anybody is serious about acting, that is what we ought to do, and we are going to have that opportunity momentarily.

The legislation proposed here in the form of an amendment has no chance of being enacted. Everybody knows that. It has not even been considered in the House of Representatives. It is a brand new bill. So it is an obvious, transparent political ploy. If we want to debate crime, let us debate something that will happen in a matter of hours.

MOTION TO PROCEED TO THE CONSIDERATION OF THE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3371

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 3371, the Omnibus Crime Control Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I understand that there is now a nondebatable motion before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HELMS. I ask unanimous consent I be permitted to proceed on a subject unrelated to that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR COMMUNIST CHINA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, during my nearly 20 years in the Senate I have dealt with literally scores of Federal officials on issues of great importance to the American people. Almost always, like other Senators, I have been given assurances that total cooperation and unflagging efforts to resolve whatever issue was at hand. And in some cases, sad to say, that was the last I ever heard of the commitments made to me.

But in other cases there were, indeed, efforts to resolve the issues. In other words, as Senators know around this place, you win some, you lose some, and some are rained out when you deal with the Federal bureaucracy.

My purpose today, Mr. President, is to pay my genuine, sincere, respects to a lady who came to my office last year and made a commitment to me; a commitment which she is clearly this day in the process of fulfilling. I have in mind the Honorable Carol Hallett, the U.S. Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. President, Commissioner Hallett came to my office last year. She came at my request to discuss the deluge of textile imports flowing into the United States from Communist China, textile products manufactured in large measure in Communist China by slave labor.

Commissioner Hallett reviewed the investigation then in process by the Customs Service, which she heads, and after discussing this flood of textiles flowing into the United States from Communist China she looked at me and she said: "Senator, I give you my word; we are going to get to the bottom of this."

This morning, a call came from Commissioner Hallett's office. She just wanted me to know that she was in New York where indictments were today being filed in Federal court in New York against, guess who—the Chinese Government.

The Associated Press later in the morning began a lengthy story this way:

> NEW YORK.—The Chinese Government is involved in a scheme to avoid paying millions of dollars in duties and taxes on textiles and clothing exported into the United States, Federal officials said Wednesday.
>
> The charge was made as authorities unveiled the first indictment to result from a massive Federal investigation into the alleged fraud.
>
> "All of the evidence indicates that there is a direct involvement" by Chinese trade officials, said U.S. Customs Service Commissioner, Carol Hallett.

I quote that part of the AP story. Later on I will have printed in the RECORD the entire story from the Associated Press earlier today.

These Chinese-controlled companies, and at least four individuals, are charged with criminally defrauding the United States in connection with massive textile imports sent into this country. And for the purpose of emphasis I will say again, in large measure these textile products are manufactured by slave labor in Communist China. This is a subject that I have discussed on this floor countless times; also in the Foreign Relations Committee of which I am the ranking member.

Communist Chinese government officials are clearly involved and at least one government official has been indicted. The reason I say "at least" is because there is at least one indictment that is not yet unsealed and we do not know the contents of that indictment. And perhaps there will be others. But we will learn as time goes by.

A Chinese trade official, Zhang Jina Jhong, Deputy Chief of the Trade Agency in the Chinese Province of Jiangsu, and his trade agency, are charged in Federal court in New York City with fraud, conspiracy, and smuggling.

That raises a question, Mr. President, about all these people who say, "You ought not bring this up, Jesse. We have to get along with the Chinese." My answer has been we do not need to get along with a bunch of crooks.

I must say, this did not go over so well with people down at the State Department—at least some of them.

One of the indicted corporations that has, of all things, the name of Sunlight International, Inc. is, in fact, owned by the Chinese Government. Its officers, who are in fact employees of the Chinese Government, were also indicted today.

Mr. President, I have been protesting for years this arrogant, outrageous conduct by the Chinese Communists. I have long been persuaded that the Communist Chinese will lie and cheat and use every underhanded trick in the book to defraud the United States. But this time, thanks to Carol Hallett and her associates at the Customs Service, they got caught—I am tempted to say with their pants down but I am not sure whether they had them up or down. It does not matter.

The Chinese scheme exposed this morning defrauded the United States Government of tens of millions of dollars. More important, it has destroyed thousands of American textile jobs. This is a point that some of us have been making for years on the Senate floor.

Industry experts estimate that as many as a half million United States textile jobs may have been lost because of the double dealing and the deceit by the Chinese Communist trade policies and activities.

But, as for this particular scheme, one part of the operations involved the transshipment of Chinese slave-made goods through other countries. In other words, China would ship them to another country and that country would ship them to the United States.

This enabled the Chinese to get around the textile quotas. It is estimated that the Communist Chinese are transshipping more than $2 billion worth of textile products into the United States every year.

Another part of the scheme involves understating the value of the textiles being shipped into the United States, again defrauding the United States of tens of millions of dollars. This is probably only the tip of the iceberg. I have learned that there are more than 50 investigations going on at this time. I knew there were some, but I did not know that there were as many as 50.

The Chinese-controlled companies have been selling the Chinese quotas—now get this—to potential importers, and when the textiles were imported, clearly as a bribe, that bribe, of course, was never included in the customs declaration form that is required by law. In fact, this is more an act of distortion than of a bribe.

In other words, anyone who wanted to deal in textiles with Communist China had to pay off the Government first. Anybody who wanted to trade in Chinese textiles has been required to go to the Chinese Government—controlled entity called China National, and they would be referred to an importer, such as Sunlight, which just happens to be owned by—guess whom—the Chinese Government.

I have a few charts that I will try to interpret. Here is what has happened. Mofert is the Commerce Department of China. China National, which I have already referred to, is controlled by the Government. Then there is the Knitwear & Home Textiles Co. in Nanjing and under it is Sunlight International, that is their New York subsidiary.

I cannot discuss this sealed indictment, but it will be unsealed, and you had better hold your nose when it is opened. And there is C&H West Merchandising, another one of these importer outfits, out in Los Angeles.

Here are the names of various people involved. Li Ping, who is vice president of Sunlight International. Guess what? He is a fugitive today. They do not know where he is. Then there is Wu Yimin, who is vice president. He was arrested. Then a fellow named Robert Hsu, who is president of C&H West Merchandising of Los Angeles, and he, too, is a fugitive.

This next chart simply demonstrates some of the MO, modus operandi, of how the Chinese Government has been hoodwinking the United States Government while Members of this Senate were saying: Oh, we have to get along with the Chinese; we must not say anything about these type of things.

Thank the Lord for Carol Hallett. She went to New York this morning and she, as they say, stuck it to them. In any case, Mr. President, I believe I mentioned an important part of the scheme involves the understatement of values of the textiles being shippped into this country, costing the United States tens of millions of dollars. Nobody knows how much.

These Chinese-controlled companies that I mentioned and demonstrated on this chart have been selling the Chinese quotas to potential importers. And when the textiles were imported, clearly a bribe, that bribe was never included in the customs declaration form.

And that is the reason Carol Hallett and her great associates, the Customs Service, hauled these people into court with indictments today in New York.

To ensure that the imported textiles would be delivered into the United States, these good people in Red China make you buy and pay money for, a portion of China's textile quotas. I think I made that clear earlier, but I wanted to repeat it for purposes of emphasis. This is like reserving your quota allocation.

Obviously, since it was an under-the-table deal, a raw deal, a dishonest deal, the importer would not mention one syllable to the Customs Service that it had paid this extra price for a portion of the Communist Chinese imports. Therefore, the prices paid for the imported textiles were tremendously undervalued and that, Mr. President, is where the Customs Service of the United States nailed them.

Mr. President, I come here today to applaud Carol Hallett and her associates at the Customs Service. We have been working with these folks for a long time. I do not know how many hours I spent on the telephone with them. I have been down there; they have been up here. We have consulted. We kept quiet about what each of us has known. We compared notes. And I was convinced from the very beginning, when Carol Hallett told me, looked me right in the eye, and said: We are going to get to the bottom of this.

The bottom line, Mr. President, is that I long ago concluded that the United States Government should stop this sorry business of playing economic footsie with the Chinese Communists. Therefore, this afternoon, I sat down and drafted an amendment in the nature of a sense-of-the-Senate resolution in this regard. It is drafted for possible consideration during the debate on S. 652, the pending legislation.

AMENDMENT NO. 1797

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to send this amendment to the desk for the purpose of having the distinguished clerk read it into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I want it read in its entirety. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1797

(Purpose: To call for a suspension of Most Favored Nation status for Communist China until the President determines and certifies that high level Chinese officials are under indictment in the United States for criminal activities in connection with the export of textiles to the United States)

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . CRIMINAL TEXTILE TRADE PRACTICES BY COMMUNIST CHINA.—It is the sense of the Senate that the President should immediately suspend nondiscriminatory trade treatment (commonly referred to as "most-favored-nation status") for the People's Republic of China until the President determines and certifies to Congress that no senior-level official of the Government of the People's Republic of China, nor any senior-level official of a provincial government of the People's Republic of China are under indictment in the United States for criminal activities in connection with the export of textiles to the United States.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the clerk, and I ask that the amendment be held at the desk for possible calling up later today or tomorrow, whichever the case may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be held at the desk.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I believe it is essential that the RECORD be made clear by the inclusion of the Associated Press story to which I alluded earlier, and which moved on the AP wire earlier this afternoon.

I am going to read part of it, and I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of it be printed in the RECORD as one story by the Associated Press.

The head on the AP story: "Indictment Brought in Massive Import Fraud Investigation," written by Paul Geitner, Associated Press writer.

Here is the way it goes:

NEW YORK (AP).—The Chinese government is involved in a scheme to avoid paying millions of dollars in duties and taxes on textiles and clothing exported to the United States, federal officials said Wednesday.

The charge was made as authorities unveiled the first indictment to result from a massive federal investigation into the alleged fraud.

"All of our evidence indicates that there is direct involvement" by Chinese trade officials, said U.S. Customs Service Commissioner Carol Hallett.

The provincial trade office in Nanjing, China, and its commissioner, Zhang Jian Zhong, were charged with fraud, conspiracy and smuggling. Also indicted on similar charges were two import companies in the United States and three U.S. residents.

As a result of the investigation, the Chinese government has threatened to retaliate against U.S. businesses operating in China, possibly by closing plants or interfering in their shipment of goods, Hallett said.

But she said she knew of no actions taken so far, adding that her conversations with at least one major U.S. company operating there indicated they were not worried.

"We are certainly not going to stand down or in any way retreat from this important investigation," Hallett said.

Official figures show China exported nearly $3.9 billion in textiles to the United States last year.

Federal officials believe another $2 billion was imported illegally, including textiles made in China but shipped through other countries to avoid quotas. The most common way-stations are Pakistan, Malaysia, Taiwan, Panama and Honduras, Hallett said.

Some 50 investigations are currently under way involving millions of dollars in lost revenues to the U.S. Treasury, authorities said. Nearly 200 search and seizure warrants were executed last year by federal agents nationwide.

The companies and individuals already charged allegedly cheated Customs and the Internal Revenue Service of $120,000, Hallett said. They were charged with fraud and conspiracy for under-reporting the value of the goods they brought into the country.

Named along with Zhang and the China Jiangsu Knitwear and Home Textiles Import and Export Corp. were: Sunlight International Inc. of Manhattan; its two vice presidents, Li Ping and Wu Yimin, both of Fort Lee, N.J.; and C&H West Merchandising Inc. of Gardena, Calif. and its president, Robert Hsu of Palos Verde Estate, Calif.

Wu was arrested Tuesday in New York, Hsu was expected to surrender in California and Li is a fugitive, U.S. Attorney Otto Obermaier said.

The United States has lost thousands of textile industry jobs because of the influx of cheap clothing from abroad, where wages are usually low and working conditions poor.

"In an ever increasing international marketplace, it is imperative that the customs laws and the income tax laws of the United States be scrupulously observed," Obermaier said.

That is the conclusion of the story.

I also have at hand a story from Reuter's, and I am going to ask unanimous consent that that story be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. ACCUSES CHINA FOR ROLE IN EXPORT SCHEME

(By Gail Appleson)

NEW YORK, May 6 (Reuter).—Federal authorities on Wednesday announced the first indictment growing out of a major investigation into an export scheme involving alleged efforts by the People's Republic of China to avoid paying millions of dollars in U.S. textile duties.

As a result of the prosecution, the Chinese government is threatening to retaliate, said Carol Hallett, commissioner of the U.S. Customs Service.

"The Chinese government has already indicated publicly it would take action against U.S. companies operating in China," she said at a news conference.

"We are certainly not going to stand down or in any way retreat," she said.

Although the indictment involves only a relatively small amount of money—underpayment of $120,000 in duties—Hallett said it was a key case that will lead to other prosecutions.

She said there were 50 separate ongoing investigations as part of the government's Operation Q-Tip probe into alleged fraudulent imports by China that could uncover underpayments running into many millions of dollars.

In 1990 total imports from China reached about $15 billion, making it the eighth largest supplier to the U.S. market, she said.

Textile imports from China were $3.7 billion in 1990 and $3.89 billion in 1991.

Hallett said the Customs Service believed China had illegally transshipped at least another $2 billion worth of goods into the United States through other countries including Pakistan, Panama, Taiwan and Honduras.

The indictment charges four individuals and three companies with participating in a scheme that began in 1988 to undervalue textiles and wearing apparel imported from China and to defraud the U.S. Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

Import duties for Chinese-made goods are assessed by the Customs Service in part based on the sale price of the items. The indictment charges that the defendants created false documents that understated these prices in order to evade payment of import duties.

Two of the individuals, Li Ping and Wu Yimin, are principals of Sunlight International, a New York sales agent that represents a Chinese textile manufacturer China Jiangsu Knitwear & Home Textiles of Nanjing, China.

Hallett said China Jiangsu is a provincial branch office of the Chinese government agency that oversees textile exports. It owns 52 percent of Sunlight and controls its operations.

"There is a direct link (with the Chinese government)," Hallett said.

The indictment charges Sunlight, China Jiangsu and Zhang Jian Zhong, a former principal of China Jiangsu and president of Sunlight, in 17 counts with conspiring to defraud the U.S. Customs Service and the IRS and importing goods from China to illegally evade the payment of U.S. import duties.

Also indicted was C & H West Merchandising Inc., a Gardona, California-based company involved in importing Chinese-made apparel from China Jiangsu and other companies, and its president Robert Hsu.

Hsu, who lives in Palos Verdes Estate, California, and the company were included in 10 counts of the indictment.

Wu Yimin, 31, of Fort Lee, New Jersey, was arrested on Tuesday in New York and Hsu was expected to surrender later on Wednesday in California. Li Ping, 37, also of Fort Lee, has not yet been arrested.

Zhang Jian Zhong, a commissioner with China's foreign trade office in Nanjing, is also a fugitive, authorities said.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, that is about it. I am not sure at this moment whether I shall call up the amendment that I had the clerk read, which is at the desk and available to be called up at the appropriate time. I want to see what the officials of the State Department have to say about this. I want them to try to persuade this Senator—perhaps some other Senators may be equally interested—that we should continue to do business with people like this. I am far from persuaded. As a matter of fact, I am absolutely persuaded that when you lie down with dogs, you get fleas.

Mr. President, I thank you, and I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOFFORD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GORTON:

S. 2659. A bill to contribute to the conservation of the northern spotted owl and the protection of old growth resources through support for an experimental management program on State-owned trust lands on the western Olympic Peninsula of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OLYMPIC EXPERIMENTAL FOREST

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that will, if passed, end 3 years of dispute over the Olympic Experimental Forest.

In 1989, a group of environmentalists, industry leaders, and community representatives came together to form the Commission on Old Growth Alternatives for Washington's Forest Trust Lands. That consensus group recommended, among other things, that a 260,000-acre experimental forest be established on the Olympic Peninsula and that its purpose be to "produce a level of timber harvest comparable with contemporary forest practices and simultaneously to provide for ecological values."

The same year, the northern spotted owl was listed as a threatened species and the dream of creating an experimental forest was placed on hold. Neither the Washington State Department of Natural Resources in its management capacity, nor the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in its regulatory capacity, has been willing to move forward with the experimental forest. The legislation I introduce today will free up the Olympic Experimental Forest to be the forest laboratory the commission intended.

Today's legislation would require the Secretary of Interior to review the commission's 1989 recommendations for the experimental forest and the Olympic Natural Resource Center and for the Secretary to make recommendations regarding the implementation of those recommendations. More importantly, the bill would require the State to submit an overall management plan for the Olympic Experimental Forest to the Secretary. If it does so, and if the Secretary determines that the plan is sufficient to provide for the conservation of the northern spotted owl, he must accept the plan in lieu of enforcing any regulations on the forest pursuant to section 4(d) of the Endangered Species Act.

The Olympic Experimental Forest is not only an ecological laboratory. It will also be laboratory for experiments in commercial output. The Washington State Commissioner of Public Lands, Brian Boyle, estimates that under today's legislation the experimental forest will produce 143 million board feet of timber per year. This would provide a significant boost to a forest that produced just 81 million board feet last year as a result of spotted owl restrictions. This legislation will not return the area to pre-spotted owl harvest levels, but it will allow the forest in that area to produce a reasonably certain level of timber production.

Similar legislation has been introduced in the House by Representatives JOLENE UNSOELD, AL SWIFT, NORM DICKS, and SID MORRISON. This is a bipartisan effort to provide a balanced approach to the management of the Olympic Experimental Forest. I hope that Congress can, at the least, see the benefit of this legislative proposal and pass it this year.

The people of Washington State, and particularly the Olympic Peninsula, have been waiting 3 years for Congress to solve a timber supply crisis in the Pacific Northwest. Today's legislation will not solve that crisis, but it is one part of the solution.

Congress must recognize that a balanced solution involves management. We cannot lock up our forests and expect them to provide for the country's various needs. Whether those needs involve recreation, wildlife, aesthetic, or commercial use, the forests must be managed. We must be active managers of our natural resources, or they will be ravaged by disease, fire, or general mismanagement. The Olympic Experimental Forest will give us all some insight into management of our forests. It was developed through consensus and I sincerely hope that it will guide us to further consensus on the difficult issues that confront us.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2659

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to assist the experimental management program being conducted by the State of Washington on State-owned trust lands on the western Olympic Peninsula in order to contribute to the conservation of the northern spotted owl and old growth resources by protecting suitable owl habitat, accelerating the development of additional suitable habitat, and developing and applying new knowledge about ecosystem management and owl conservation, while still providing a sustainable supply of timber and stable trust income.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In June 1989, a group of environmentalists, timber industry representatives, and other community leaders known as the Commission on Old Growth Alternatives for Washington's Forest Trust Lands reached consensus on a comprehensive set of recommendations for the management of old growth and associated forests in a newly created 260,000 acre Olympic Experimental State Forest. The experimental forest is bounded on the north by the Strait of Juan de Fuca, the west by the Pacific Ocean, the east by the range line between townships 9 and 10, and the South by the Queets River.

(2) The Commission recommended that the State of Washington—

(A) Adopt an ecosystem approach to management of the forest lands in the experimental forest;

(B) provide a systematic research program in conjunction with the Olympic Natural Resources Center;

(C) implement innovative forest management methods in the experimental forest, such as new forestry;

(D) continue to provide a sustainable, stable flow of timber from the experimental forest to local communities;

(E) defer harvest on 15,000 acres of old growth and spotted owl habitat in the experimental forest; and

(F) provide for greater coordination with adjacent Federal and private landowners.

(3) The Olympic Natural Resources Center has received State and Federal funding and is developing a research program involving State and other lands in the area.

(4) The listing of the northern spotted owl as threatened under section 4(c) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)) has led to discretionary decisions by the Secretary of the Interior which have constrained the ability of the State of Washington to implement many of the Commission's recommendations.

(5) It is likely that the full implementation of the Commission's recommendations, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, would satisfy the purpose of section 4(d) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(d)).

SEC. 3. REVIEW OF IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS.

(a) REVIEW REQUIRED.—Upon the request of the State of Washington, the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the extent to which the State has adopted and is implementing the following recommendations of the Commission on Old Growth Alternatives for Washington's Forest Trust Lands contained in the June 1989 final report of the Commission:

(1) Recommendation B, to establish an Olympic Experimental State Forest on Department of Natural Resources trust lands on the west side of the Olympic Peninsula to experiment with harvest and regeneration methods intended to sustain key elements of ecological diversity and habitat while producing commodities from a managed commercial forest.

(2) Recommendation C, to establish an Olympic Natural Resource Center to develop research and education programs in support of the management of natural resources, ecosystems, and riparian areas of the Olympic Peninsula for both the production of commodities and the maintenance of ecological values.

(3) Recommendation D, to establish an independent sustained yield unit on the Olympic Experimental State Forest after a stepped-down conversion period of 10 years.

(4) Recommendation E, to defer harvest for at least 15 years on 15,000 acres of mature, natural stands identified by wildlife biologists as most critical for the northern spotted owl.

(b) INFORMING STATE OF RESULTS OF REVIEW.—The Secretary shall submit to the State of Washington the results of the review conducted under subsection (a). The Secretary shall include such recommendations regarding the implementation of the Commission's recommendations as the Secretary considers to be appropriate.

SEC. 4. SUBMISSION AND REVIEW OF STATE MANAGEMENT AND RESEARCH PLANS FOR THE EXPERIMENTAL FOREST.

(a) SUBMISSION OF PLANS.—After completion of the review required by section 3, the State of Washington may submit to the Secretary of the Interior—

(1) an overall management plan for the Olympic Experimental State Forest that—

(A) is based on the recommendations of the Commission on Old Growth Alternatives for Washington's Forest Trust Lands referred to in section 3; and

(B) contains a framework for coordinated decision making between the State land management agency and the Olympic Natural Resources Center or a comparable research institution; and

(2) a scientific research plan mutually developed and agreed on by the State land management agency and the Olympic Natural Resources Center or a comparable research institution.

(b) REVIEW OF ADEQUACY OF PLAN.—Upon submission of the management and research plans for the Olympic Experimental State Forest, the Secretary shall determine whether the plans are sufficient to provide for the conservation of the northern spotted owl in the experimental forest and are consistent with the objectives for the Olympic Peninsula contained in the final northern spotted owl recovery plan, or, if no final plan exists, then the draft recovery plan. The Secretary shall complete the review of the management and research plans within 60 days after the submission of applicable documentation by the State of Washington under subsection (a).

(c) EFFECT OF SUFFICIENT PLANS.—If the Secretary determines that the management and research plans for the Olympic Experimental State Forest satisfy the requirements specified in subsection (b), the Secretary shall accept the plans for the experimental forest in lieu of enforcing any regulations adopted pursuant to section 4(d) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(d)) to provide for the conservation of the northern spotted owl. Before accepting the plans, the Secretary shall require the State of Washington to make a formal commitment to follow the plans.

(d) CONTINUING OVERSIGHT.—The Secretary shall periodically review the implementation of the management and research plans by the State of Washington. The Secretary shall continue to accept the plans unless the Secretary determines that the State no longer complies with the plans or that the requirements specified in subsection (b) are no longer satisfied.

By Mr. WOFFORD:

S. 2660. A bill to amend the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 to make modifications in the Market Promotion Program; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICULTURAL MARKET PROMOTION PROGRAM AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. WOFFORD. Mr. President, as our Nation continues to linger in this recession, it has become increasingly clear that our Nation must develop an economic strategy to create jobs for American workers and American families by ensuring our competitiveness abroad and creating long-term economic growth. As we formulate that strategy, it is critical that any Government assistance we provide to improve competitiveness goes to the segment of our economy which is most needy and also represents the best opportunity for growth—small- and medium-sized enterprises—and not to corporate welfare programs for our Nation's wealthiest companies.

Toward that end, I rise today to introduce a bill to help small- to medium-sized agricultural companies establish a foothold in foreign markets by making it easier for them to utilize the Market Promotion Program. Equally important, this proposal would eliminate the corporate welfare that this program is currently providing to many of our country's largest agricultural exporters.

The Market Promotion Program has been the subject of widespread criticism—and the public has a right to be upset when they hear stories of companies with sales exceeding half a billion dollars, companies such as Gallo Wines, receiving over $10 million in Government funds to promote their wines in foreign markets. Or Blue Diamond receiving over $31 million the last 5 years to sell almonds abroad. Or Sunkist Growers receiving $48 million from the taxpayers over the past 5 years to promote their citrus fruit overseas. The Market Promotion Program was not intended to provide a permanent handout for successful agricultural corporations—rather, it was intended to provide financial assistance to agricultural producers to enter new export markets or improve their export sales.

In spite of these and other well-documented abuses, the Market Promotion Program has helped many companies gain a foothold in a foreign market. In my State of Pennsylvania, for example, the Goldenberg Candy Co. of Philadelphia has made inroads into markets in Europe and the Middle East and Zeigler Bros. of Adams County has begun exporting grain-based bird food to Japan. This is exactly the type of assistance the program was designed to provide and that should be available to more companies.

While the Market Promotion Program has had notable and laudable successes, it has been widely criticized. These criticisms are focused in three areas:

That the program is now dominated by large and wealthy corporations that receive large amounts of money year after year;

That there is no domestic processing requirement for receiving the assistance; and

That due to ineffective Government oversight efforts some companies may be using MPP funds in lieu of, rather than as a supplement to, their own marketing funds.

The General Accounting Office has made a series of recommendations to the Foreign Agricultural Service to improve the Market Promotion Program. This legislation contains provisions to address each of the three main areas of concern and incorporates many of the GAO's recommendations.

First, by limiting the size of companies eligible to participate, this legislation will free up funds for small- and medium-sized companies that genuinely need financial assistance to enter foreign markets. Specifically, this legislation would bar from participation any commercial entity with sales exceeding $500 million per year. In addition, it would place a 5-year limit per product per market on all branded participants. Together these provisions will make the large corporations such as Gallo Wines and Sunkist Growers ineligible. The legislation also caps at $500,000 the amount any branded participant could receive in any single year. This means Blue Diamond, while still eligible to participate in the program, could have received no more than $500,000 in 1990 instead of the $7.7 million it actually received.

Second, there is a domestic processing requirement for any product receiving money as a branded promotion. No branded product with less than 50-percent domestic processing would be allowed to participate in the program and products with the greatest amount of processing would be given preference when money is disbursed. Keeping the processing in the United States will create manufacturing jobs and increase tax revenues at all levels—local, State, and Federal.

Third, this legislation would ensure that the Market Promotion Program remains a public-private partnership. Any company seeking funds must demonstrate that the Government's money will be used as a supplement to the company's own export promotion efforts. A company would have to disclose to the Foreign Agricultural Service, on a confidential basis, what it spent on market promotion in the previous year and would then be required to use the Market Promotion Program money in addition to money the company previously allotted to marketing.

I am proposing other safeguards to ensure this money is not wasted. This legislation will change the current spending floor of $200 million to a spending ceiling. The Foreign Agricultural Service will not have to seek out groups to take funds because it is required to distribute all of the $200 million; instead, they can provide funds to the organizations that design the best plans to utilize them. And to monitor the success of the Market Promotion Program, this legislation requires the GAO to report to Congress 1 year from enactment on the success or failure of these reforms.

Mr. President, I believe that the original purpose of the Market Promotion Program serves an important role in helping U.S. agriculture producers increase exports of domestic products. However, we have to halt the practice of providing assistance to our largest and wealthiest corporations who do not need the help, yet receive the lion's share year after year. Instead, we must return this program to its intended mission to help small- and medium-sized agricultural producers and processors expand into foreign markets.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BACKGROUND

The Foreign Agricultural Service (FAS) of the U.S. Department of Agriculture administers the Market Promotion Program (MPP) to promote the export of U.S. agricultural commodities. Program participants include nonprofit, agricultural trade organizations, state-related organizations and private profit-making companies. Program funds are used for both the generic promotion of U.S. commodities and promotion of branded products containing U.S. commodities.

BILL PROVISIONS

Broaden Objectives of the Program

The program's objectives are broadened to include not only expanding export markets for U.S. agricultural commodities, but expanding export markets for companies that use U.S. agricultural commodities in their products, and that manufacture those products in the United States.

Means-Testing for Companies

Only companies with less than $500,000,000 in annual gross sales (foreign and domestic) will be eligible for assistance under the MPP for branded promotions.

Cap on annual funding for any individual company

For branded participants, a $500,000 cap per company on annual funding is established.

Minimum U.S. content and processing requirement, and incentives to encourage more U.S. content and processing

For branded participants, a minimum U.S. commodity content and U.S. processing requirement of 50 percent is established. Any branded product containing less than 50 percent U.S. agricultural commodities or less than 50 percent domestic processing is not eligible for MPP assistance.

Priority funding is given to those products with the highest percentage of U.S. commodity content and U.S. processing.

MPP funds allowed only as supplement not replacement of company expenditures on marketing

For branded participants, MPP funds can only be used to finance market development above and beyond what was spent on market development the previous year, excluding MPP funds.

This will require a certification to FAS by each participating company, on a business-confidential basis, of their total marketing budget (foreign and domestic) for the previous year—to ensure that MPP funds do not simply replace marketing funds that the company would have spent anyway.

Reimbursement for branded participants is set at 50 percent of the additional (the increase over the previous year) eligible promotional expenses, not to exceed $500,000.

Limit on program participation

For branded promotions, a 5-year time limit on a company's participation, per market, per product, is established.

For generic promotions (for specified commodities), criteria, based on market penetration, are to be established to determine a cap on the use of MPP funds, per commodity, per market, once a certain penetration level is reached.

Miscellaneous provisions

Under the TEA program, some participants received higher reimbursement rates than currently provided for under the MPP program. The 1990 Farm Bill phased down these higher reimbursement rates to current reimbursement rates over a 5-year period. This legislation eliminates the phase down and requires current reimbursement rates for all MPP participants.

GAO is required to report to Congress one year from the enactment of this legislation on FAS' progress in implementing this legislation.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. WOFFORD, Mr. PELL, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. JEFFORDS):

S. 2661. A bill to authorize the striking of a medal commemorating the 250th anniversary of the founding of the American Philosophical Society and the birth of Thomas Jefferson; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

STRIKING OF MEDAL TO COMMEMORATE THE FOUNDING OF THE AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY AND THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the American Philosophical Society will celebrate its 250th anniversary in April 1993. In 1743, Benjamin Franklin, one of the society's principal founders, wrote "the first drudgery of settling new colonies is now pretty well over and there are many in every province in circumstances that set them at ease, and afford leisure to cultivate the finer arts, and improve the common stock of knowledge." Thus was the country's first learned society born. Its early members included most of the great Founders of the Republic; Washington, Adams, Hamilton, Paine. Membership was not limited to Americans, however. European scientists also proudly proclaimed membership in the society on title pages of their books.

The society's contribution to the young Nation cannot be overlooked. Such were its resources and great influence that it served many functions; National Academy of Science, National Library and Museum, even Patent Office. Then as today, most anyone of great scholarly accomplishment was included among its ranks. In 1780, Pennsylvania granted a charter which guaranteed that the APS might correspond with learned individuals and institutions "of any nation or country." The State also deeded a portion of Independence Square to the society, on which it erected a hall in 1785–89.

The American Philosophical Society promotes useful knowledge in the sciences and humanities through excellence in scholarly research, professional meetings, publications, library resources, and community service. Its members are elected for their scholarly and scientific accomplishments in all fields of learning, including mathematical and physical sciences, biological and medial sciences, social sciences, humanities, and public affairs.

The society's library is a major national center of research. It holds some 180,000 volumes and 6,000,000 manuscripts specializing in the history of science in America and its European background. It also houses a vast biographical archives and an outstanding collection of maps and prints. Its rare collection is among the finest in the world.

As important is the role the society plays in promoting research. It bestows awards upon those accomplished in such fields as jurisprudence, astronomy, and navigation. It also sponsors major research grant programs, and has over the years given some $14 million to 11,000 individual scholars and scientists. More than $30 million has gone to other scholarly projects.

In short, Mr. President, we owe an incalculable debt to the American Philosophical Society. It is more than a learned society; it is a national treasure. Next year's anniversary coincides with the 250th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, both member and third president of the society. The APS plans to commemorate both of these historic dates with special events in Philadelphia. I rise today to introduce a bill authorizing the striking of a gold medal to present to the society as Congress' contribution to this lofty occasion. The society will present bronze duplicates of the medal, hereafter to be known as the "Thomas Jefferson Medal," to persons of scholarly achievement in annual ceremonies, the first of which will take place next year. I trust my colleagues will concur that this is fitting recognition for an organization which has contributed so mightily to the cultural and intellectual life of this Nation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 2662. A bill entitled the "Irwin Rutman Retired Safety Officers Benefits Act"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IRWIN RUTMAN RETIRED SAFETY OFFICERS BENEFITS ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Irwin Rutman Retired Safety Officers Benefits Act. This bill extends death and disability benefits to retired public safety officers who are killed or disabled in the course of attempting to rescue or in responding to a fire or police emergency. These benefits are currently only available to those officers who had been on active duty.

In October 1990, Irwin Rutman, a retired 23-year veteran of the New York City Police Department, witnessed a mugging in a dark Manhattan subway train. Mr. Rutman immediately attempted to intervene and aid the crime victim when a struggle ensued between Mr. Rutman and the mugger. Mr. Rutman was brutally shot in the head.

He left behind a wife and four young sons. Two sons were in college at the time of his death. Because Mr. Rutman was retired, his family was ineligible to apply for the death benefit funds available under the Public Safety Officers' Benefits Act. If Mr. Rutman had been on active duty, his family would have been eligible for up to $100,000 in death benefits.

Last year, Congresswoman MOLINARI introduced a similar bill in the House. It was reviewed by the House Judiciary Committee and was eventually incorporated into the House crime bill. I am introducing the same provision that was passed as part of the House crime bill. At the time of its introduction, there was considerable support from police and firefighting professional organizations.

The cost of this provision is negligible. The House Budget Committee did not characterize the budgetary impact as significant. The Congressional Budget Office advised the House Judiciary Committee that this expansion of benefits would result in direct spending of under $500,000 annually. Even though the expense of this bill is minimal, it appropriately honors those heroes and their families who deserve our support.

During the initial House Judiciary Committee review, a number of changes were made to Congresswoman MOLINARI's original bill. One change eliminated a provision concerning retroactivity. Consequently, Irwin Rutman's family will not derive any financial benefit from the passage of this bill.

Nevertheless, Mr. Rutman's widow, Elaine, believes that, in order to help other families whose loved ones died or were maimed in acts of bravery, we should name and pass a bill in Mr. Rutman's honor. I agree. Irwin Rutman made the ultimate sacrifice in the battle against crime. This would be a living memorial to a concerned citizen, a good Samaritan, and a police officer who never shed his duty even though retired.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2662

By Mr. SEYMOUR:

S. 2663. A bill to increase the accountability of the executive branch and Congress; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

OMNIBUS CONGRESSIONAL AND PRESIDENTIAL COVERAGE AND ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

• Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, it is no secret that the American people are not happy with the U.S. Congress. In poll after poll, a large majority of Americans believe that Congress is out of touch with the Americans they represent. But there's more than just dissatisfaction. The American people are angry. They are angry because they believe Congress has become an ivory tower of government: It sees but does not feel or reach out to the average American. It rules rather than represents the people. And it is out-of-touch because its own day-to-day operations is beyond reality and the law.

Let me describe what I mean, Mr. President:

Americans don't understand how a Member of Congress could once write checks that never bounced.

Americans aren't pleased that their tax dollars go to provide Members of Congress gourmet meals, fitness services, medicinal services, and other posh privileges free or at discount prices.

Americans can't believe that a Member of Congress needn't fear that his or her wages will be garnished because of failure to pay bills.

Americans are amazed that Congress can evade full compliance with worker safety, wage or age discrimination laws.

This is not the kind of Congress the founders of this nation envisioned. This is not the kind of Congress the American people expect. This is not the kind of Congress the American people are proud of.

It's about time that Members of Congress have only one privilege: the privilege to serve the people.

It's about time that Congress be no less accountable than the average law-abiding guy on the street.

Yes; it's easy to make fun of Congress. But I'm not going to poke fun or bash Congress. I'll leave that to Leno and Letterman. Joking about Congress won't change it. Congress needs to be reformed.

Reform means term limits on Members of Congress. I strongly believe that the longer a member stays in Congress the more out-of-touch that member becomes. That's why, as a California State senator, I supported proposition 140, which limits the length of service for members of the California Legislature. And that's why I cosponsored the constitutional amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS] to limit a Member's stay in Congress to 12 years—2 terms for a Senator, 6 for a Member of the House. Only with term limits are we going to put an end to Congress simply being a generational ruling class.

Reform means more than limiting terms. It means offering proposals that put an end to questionable practices within Congress. And that is what I intend to do. Today, I am introducing a legislative package that makes several needed changes to restore Congress as an accountable institution—accountable to the law and to all Americans.

First and foremost, I intend to put an end to unmeritorious efforts to inflate congressional pay.

I was strongly opposed to last year's late night Senate pay raise. Federal spending remains out of control. Our economy remains stagnant. Millions of people still remain out of work. But we raised our pay. Like everyone else, we at least should raise our pay for a job well done. And no future accomplishment will be worth anything unless Congress finally bites the bullet and balances the Federal budget.

And that's what I propose we do. Today, I am submitting a Senate resolution that prohibits any measure to raise a Senator's pay unless we've passed a balanced budget. Whether it's a pay hike or a simple cost of living adjustment, the Senate can't consider it until we've earned it.

Why do I make future pay increases contingent on a balanced budget? Because it's the one true element of government that we can control. It is our responsibility to pass a balanced budget, and put an end to paying for Federal programs out of the pockets of the next generation of Americans. And if we fail to live up to this responsibility, then we don't deserve to reward ourselves.

It's time we raise our pay the old fashioned way. It's time to earn it.

But my reform proposal takes pay raise control a step further. The ultimate judges of a Congressman's merits are the people. So I am introducing legislation which includes a provision that requires any congressional pay raise to not take affect until after a general election has occurred. In short, if a Member of Congress deserves a raise, then the people will send him back to Washington to collect it.

But we must not stop at controlling congressional pay. In a decade supposedly dedicated to reduce government spending, one of the greatest failures of Congress was to control spending for itself. In just 11 years, from 1981 to 1992, the cost of running Congress to the American taxpayer has doubled.

Leading this growth in the cost of Congress is the U.S. Senate. In 1981, the cost of running the U.S. Senate was $160 million. This year, it hit an all-time high of $488 million—nearly half a billion dollars.

In short, the nominal cost of running the U.S. Senate has tripled. But what's even more amazing is that the growth in the cost of the Senate exceeded the cost growth of Medicare, Social Security, food stamps, veterans benefits, and other programs to assist the poor, the elderly, the jobless, and at-risk youth.

If we intend to control Federal spending, if we intend to no longer mortgage the future of your children and grandchildren, then we must lead by example. Congress must learn to tighten its own belt.

While Congress begins to make real reductions in defense spending, it must make some real reductions in its own spending. A message must be sent that Congress is not immune from spending control.

As my colleagues know, I successfully amended the Senate's budget resolution to reduce the already excessive budget of the Congress by 25 percent over 2 years—a reduction that will save the American taxpayer $2 billion over 5 years.

I don't intend to rest on this issue. The legislation I am introducing today not only slashes spending in the Senate by 25 percent, it will keep the Senate from becoming spendthrifts in the future.

When it comes to controlling excessive spending, Congress must lead by example. But just as important, Congress must no longer hide by exemption. We in Congress must be made accountable to the very laws it passes for others. It just makes sense to do so.

After all, when businesses are required to comply with Federal worker safety laws, shouldn't we expect Congress to provide the same degree of safety for its workers?

If a Member of Congress discriminates on the basis of race, sex, or age, shouldn't we expect that Member to face the same penalties that are applied against private sector employers?

Employees in the private sector and in the civil service have the right to form unions if they choose. Shouldn't congressional employees be given the same right to make those choices?

Businesses across the Nation are making major changes in the workplace to accommodate and meet the needs of disabled Americans. Shouldn't the entire Congress be required to make the same accommodations?

That being the case, why is the entire Congress exempt from virtually every major labor, equal pay, and worker safety law that we impose on private citizens? Why has Congress made itself above the law?

Well, some have argued that Congress is special. But we in Congress are no more special than the largest corporation or the smallest mom and pop shop. We are the people's representatives. Not their rulers. What's best for the workplace, what's best for each American, is best for Congress.

Fortunately, we are on the road to accountability. Last year, the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] offered an amendment to the civil rights bill that applies Federal race, sex, age, and disabled discrimination laws to the Senate. I was proud to support that amendment.

But it was a partial victory. A complete victory is when every exemption from Federal law is removed and Congress operates under the same conditions imposed on the private sector.

When we debated the Grassley amendment last year, I stated that Congress suffers from a cancer of unaccountability. And making the Senate operate under civil rights laws was simply the first step in curing Congress of this cancer. I called that first step legislative chemotherapy.

My congressional reform package represents the next phase of treatment. Under the legislation I am introducing today, both House and Senate no longer will be exempt from every Federal labor, civil rights, and worker safety law on the books.

Furthermore, my legislation also brings Congress under Federal wage garnishment laws. If we fail to pay our debts, we should face the same conditions and treatment that any debt violator faces.

That is the essence of my congressional reform package. A number of similar bills from a number of my distinguished colleagues have already been introduced on similar subjects, and my package, in part, represents a combination of the best proposals out there that can do the most to reform Congress.

I have been in public service for more than 15 years, but as one of the Senate's new kids on the block, I must confess that public service takes on a whole new meaning when one becomes a Member of Congress. Throughout my career in State and local government, my former colleagues and I balanced our budgets. This year is the first time that I have been a part of a legislative body that passed a budget with a deficit—a deficit roughly five times the size of the State of California's entire budget for 1 year.

I supported proposition 140, which reduced the budget of the California Legislature by 40 percent. And now I'm trying to apply similar fiscal medicine to Congress.

But more important, I am proud and honored to be a public servant. I was proud to serve the citizens of Orange County as both mayor of Anaheim and a State senator. And I am enormously proud to serve the entire State of California as a U.S. Senator. And I just can't stand and allow my pride and my honor as a public servant to be tarnished by the events of the past year that have occurred in Congress. I want to do more than simply identify the problems of Congress. I want to change them.

I truly believe that if democracy is to succeed, the people must have faith in Government. I've heard from many Californians, and they have expectations of how Congress should perform. They expect Congress to be no better, no different and no less accountable to the law than the law-abiding citizens it represents. And rightly so.

Americans must be able to see Congress as a symbol not just of Government, but of the ideals at the heart of our system—the ideal that no man is above the law; the ideal that to serve the people in the ultimate privilege of public office; the ideal that this is a Government not to the people, but by, for, and of the people.

I believe my reform package, if enacted, will bring Congress closer to the people, and restore the people's confidence, the people's faith, the people's trust in the Congress—the people's body.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution and legislation be printed in the appropriate place in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DIXON:

S. 2664. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on certain chemicals; to the Committee on Finance.

TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSION ON CERTAIN CHEMICALS

• Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to temporarily suspend the duty on three chemicals that are used to produce new pharmaceutical drugs. This bill is simple and noncontroversial. It eliminates the duty on chemicals that are not produced in the United States, so they can be imported to produce unique drugs for domestic and foreign sale. All of the chemicals in the legislation are part of proprietary, highly specific chemical conversion processes for which substitute chemicals cannot be used.

Cyclohexane, 1,1-bis(1-methylethoxy) is used in the production of clarithromycin, which is used in the treatment of community-acquired respiratory infections. Clarithromycin is an effective antibiotic against the organism hemophilus influenza, which causes upper and lower respiratory tract infections.

Benzenepropanoic acid, 2-chloro-4,5-difluoro-beta-oxo-ethyl ester is a chemical used in the production of Temafloxacin. Temafloxacin is a quinolone antibiotic that is very effective in combating the primary cause of community-acquired respiratory tract infections. The use of benzenepropanoic acid to produce Temafloxacin is unique and a process patent application is pending in the United States.

2-acetylbenzo(b)thiophene is a chemical used to produce zileuton, a drug currently undergoing clinical testing. Zileuton is the first of a new class of drugs used primarily to treat asthma, and conditions such as ulcerative colitis, rhinitis, and rheumatoid arthritis. There are no other known drugs which provide beneficial effects in the same manner as zileuton.

Abbott Laboratories, the U.S. firm that produces these drugs, anticipates that the benefits from the duty suspension would contribute to its research and development efforts in the pharmaceutical field, an area where the United States is still a leader. In addition, increased U.S. export sales is expected.

I understand that the Finance Committee is considering putting together another miscellaneous trade and tariff bill; I strongly believe this provision should be included in that measure.

Mr. President, this is a meritorious bill, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure its prompt enactment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2664

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

"9902.31.12	Cyclohexane, 1,1-bis(1-methylethoxy) (CAS No. 1132–95–2) (provided for in subheading 2911.00.00)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/94

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section applies with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. GORE):

S. 2665. A bill to establish a program to increase the level of science and technology cooperation between the United States and Latin America; to the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation.

INTER-AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC COOPERATION ACT OF 1992

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce the Inter-American Scientific Cooperation Act of 1992. This legislation is aimed at increasing our scientific and technological ties with the nations of Latin America. The United States is known as a world leader in science and technology. In order to maintain and strengthen our leadership, the United States needs to reevaluate our current process for science and technology cooperation. Unfortunately, cooperative efforts between the United States and one of our most important partners, Latin America, have declined in the past 20 years. This bill seeks to reverse this trend by establishing a strong alliance in joint research and education between Latin America and the United States.

As scientific cooperation between Latin America and the United States has declined, Latin America has looked increasingly to Europe and Japan for scientific and technological training. This trend, in conjunction with the increased emphasis on science and technology in the national development plans of many Latin American nations, will mean a loss of United States influence if we do not act to reassert our interest in this area. Such a reawakening of United States-Latin American cooperation is not only possible but imperative. The bill I am introducing today is but one step, albeit an important step, towards reinvigorating cooperation between the United States and Latin America.

We need to develop policies with our Latin American neighbors which are consistent and which support common interests in science and technology. As the Latin American nations strive to increase the standard of living for their people and as we strive to become more economically competitive with other industrialized nations in Europe and Asia, the need for cooperation between the nations of Latin America and the United States becomes evident. It is good policy for us to forge scientific and technological partnerships with Latin America now, as a basis for establishing economic markets later. The United States would not only aid Latin America but would also benefit from expanded trade and investment opportunities.

As a result of the political and economic turmoil in Latin America in recent years, these nations have had an extremely difficult time in developing their scientific and technological resources. In addition, a new generation of advanced technologies, microelectronics, biotechnologies, new materials, and new energy technologies, present a new set of challenges and problems for science and technology activities all over the world. Hence, the rapid rate of advancement has made it difficult for some Latin American countries to keep abreast of the latest global scientific developments.

Increased science and technical cooperation would not only aid Latin America but would also benefit the United States. Unique natural environments and conditions make Latin America a critical area for research opportunities for U.S. scientists. For example, to thoroughly investigate such topics as the deforestation of the Amazon Basin and its contribution to global climate change and species diversity, U.S. scientists need stable working relationships with Latin American scientists as well as access to these environments.

The new Inter-American scientific cooperation program within the NSF would consist of several elements. The first is an expansion of funds. At present, NSF funds joint research projects between the United States and Latin America through its international division, with funding under $1 million. This bill would expand the scope of joint research activities with an authorization of $10 million in FY 1993 and up to $10 million in FY 1994.

The bill would also increase the number of Latin American exchange students eligible to study in the United States. Since the peak year of 1982, enrollment of Latin American students in the United States has dropped by 31 percent and more Latin American students have elected to study in Europe and in Japan. This trend has been fostered by several factors including the Latin American debt crisis, devaluation of currencies, decline of oil revenues, rise in the cost of education in the United States, improvement in indigenous opportunities, and increased opportunities in other Latin American countries, Europe, and Japan.

In order to reverse these trends, this bill establishes the Inter-American Scientific Educational Development Exchange to provide graduate and postdoctoral fellowships, both for Latin Americans studying in the United States and for all U.S. students who wish to study in Latin America. There will also be an exchange of information and technical assistance between the scientists and engineers of both countries interested in establishing data bases and computer linkages.

These exchanges are both political and economic investments for the United States. As part of the future leadership in their homelands, these students will play key roles in determining the political and economic alliances that the region will forge in the next century. This type of communication link is critical for strengthening the Latin American scientific infrastructure as well as for regional and global cooperation.

Mr. President, the viability of the U.S. economy is inescapably linked to the world economy. A successful Latin America will be fundamental to world economic growth and thus to our own. Increased cooperation by the United States and Latin America in the areas of science and technology will provide new research and development opportunities and, as a consequence, positively impact economic growth. It is my sincere hope that my colleagues will support this legislation.

I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2665

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND DEFINITIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Latin America shares a wide range of scientific and technological concerns with the United States, and the diversity of Latin American countries and their needs in science and technology are significant;

(2) the need for science and technology cooperation with Latin America has increased significantly since the 1970's, but mechanisms for cooperation have decreased since many countries in Latin America graduated from programs sponsored by the Agency for International Development;

(3) Latin American scientists and engineers have increasingly looked to Europe and Japan for advanced training and research, and this trend, in conjunction with the emphasis on science and technology in Latin American national development plans and the increase in science and technology cooperation among Latin American nations, may result in a loss of mutually beneficial commerce and scientific cooperation between Latin America and the United States;

(4) investment by the United States in the Latin American science and technology infrastructure and participation of United States scientists and engineers in short-term and long-term assignments in Latin America can further improve relations between the United States and Latin America, and bring many benefits to the United States, including scientific access, enhanced trade and investment relations, and the opportunity to contribute to economic growth and democratization in the hemisphere;

(5) science and technology cooperation with the United States and advanced training and research in the United States can bring many benefits to Latin America, for example, in developing Latin American countries cooperation can contribute to the strengthening of basic science and technology infrastructure, and in industrially advanced Latin American countries, cooperation can increase opportunities in many scientific disciplines and in the frontier scientific fields;

(6) considerable progress in science and technology cooperation can be made with relatively modest investments; and

(7) the return to democracy in a number of Latin American countries provides renewed vigor for freedom of scientific inquiry, cooperation, and progress, as well as a focus for the reversal of the decline in science and technology cooperation between the United States and Latin America.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this Act—

(1) the term "Director" means the Director of the National Science Foundation;

(2) the term "Latin America" means Mexico, the Caribbean basin, Central America, and South America; and

(3) the term "Program" means the Inter-American Scientific Cooperation Program established under section 3.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PROGRAM.

The National Science Foundation shall establish an Inter-American Scientific Cooperation Program aimed at increasing the level of science and technology cooperation between the United States and Latin America. The National Science Foundation, in establishing this Program, shall identify and cooperate with private and governmental funding bodies, both in Latin America and in the United States. The Program shall include the following elements:

(1) ENCOURAGEMENT AND FUNDING.—Encouragement and funding of project development interchanges and joint research projects between United States and Latin American scientists and engineers. Interchanges and joint projects funded by the National Science Foundation shall, whenever possible, include cost sharing from sources within the Latin American countries whose citizens participate in such interchanges and projects. The Director shall determine the amount of cost sharing which is required.

(2) INTER-AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXCHANGE.—(A) Establishment in accordance with section 13 of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 (42 U.S.C. 1872) of an Inter-American Scientific Educational Development Exchange (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the "Exchange"). The Exchange's activities shall include—

(i) graduate and postdoctoral fellowships in science and technology for Latin Americans to study in the United States and for United States citizens to study in Latin America;

(ii) collection and dissemination of information to Latin Americans on other avenues for advanced study in science and technology in the United States; and

(iii) United States assistance to Latin American institutions, at the institutions' request, for development of courses, seminars, and curriculum in science and technology.

(B) In awarding fellowships under this paragraph, the Exchange shall give priority to candidates who are professionally active scientists or engineers and whose institutions give assurance that a position will be available to such individuals after completion of the fellowship. Fellowships for Latin Americans shall, whenever possible, include cost sharing from sources within the country of origin of the recipient. The amount of cost sharing required shall be determined by the Director.

(3) INFORMATION AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—Exchanging information and technical assistance between United States and Latin American scientists and engineers interested in establishing data bases and computer linkages.

(4) EQUIPMENT.—Providing information to enable the routing of scientific equipment between the United States and Latin America, including information with respect to matching equipment with need, identifying technical maintenance requirements, and meeting customs regulations.

(5) RESEARCH PROGRAMS.—Promotion of research programs which utilize unique natural environments or existing or potential centers of scientific research excellence in Latin America.

SEC. 4. REPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Beginning on March 1, 1994 and each year thereafter through March 1, 1999, the Director shall submit to the Congress a report which—

(2) includes a description of how activities of the Program relate to other ongoing and prospective National Science Foundation activities in Latin America;

(3) describes plans for the current and upcoming fiscal years' activities;

(4) recommends priorities for cooperation in terms of scientific disciplines and geographic regions; and

(5) recommends necessary legislative or administrative changes in the Program.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—Every two years, the report described in subsection (a) shall include a description, analysis, and compilation of funding data for all federally funded research and development activities carried out in, or in cooperation with, Latin American nations.

SEC. 5. FUNDING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director is authorized to make available not more than $10,000,000 of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 101 of the National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 1988 for each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994 to carry out this Act.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—From amounts made available pursuant to subsection (a), the Director shall make available to carry out this Act $400,000 in each of the fiscal years 1993 through 1998 to universities, institutions or centers that have a comprehensive bilateral linkage program in the field of science or technology with a Latin American university, institution or center.●

By Mr. PELL:

S. 2666. A bill to shift Impact Aid funding responsibility for military connected children from the Department of Education to the Department of Defense; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FUNDING RESPONSIBILITY FOR MILITARY CONNECTED CHILDREN

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on the Federal level we have established the Impact Aid Program to provide financial assistance to school districts where a Federal activity, such as the operation of a military base, results in an increased number of children to be educated and a depleted local tax base from which to draw support for their education. Schools are left in a double-bind and often utterly dependent on impact aid dollars.

The reality today, though, is that the Impact Aid Program is underfunded and our children are underserved. Local communities have been forced to absorb the costs of educating military children, and too often the result is a diminished education for all children in a district.

As we approach reauthorization of the Impact Aid Program in the 103d Congress, the Department of Defense's responsibility for the education of military dependents is something we need to carefully reconsider. Today, I am introducing legislation aimed at reducing the school finance inequity that plagues communities which support military installations. The bill, which is primarily a discussion piece, takes several steps to require the military to pay its fair share.

First, the bill would transfer impact aid funding responsibility for children of military dependents from the Department of Education to the Department of Defense, where it belongs. And second, the bill would require the Department of Defense to provide school districts with the financial capacity to adequately serve disabled students.

This second aspect of the legislation addresses an area with which I am particularly concerned—the effects of personnel assignments by the Department of Defense on behalf of military families with severely handicapped children. Often the military confers special compassionate post-assignments for these personnel to areas with school districts that have outstanding special needs programs.

For example, in the State of Rhode Island, the Middletown school district, which has an excellent special needs program, absorbs the cost of educating a handful of special needs children. Middletown is compensated with a few extra dollars in Impact Aid funding for special needs children, but it is saddled with a crippling per pupil cost that has reached as high as $100,000.

Like many communities across the nation, Middletown welcomes these children into its schools. It is critical, however, that the Department of Defense take greater responsibility for the financial burden they bring.

With a budget 10 times as large as the Department of Education, the Department of Defense is more able to assure military families of our collective gratitude and support for their sacrifices. It should begin in showing that appreciation with the full funding of the education costs of all military children.

Mr. President, Impact Aid is a very complex program that focuses far too often not on the education of the children involved, but on the impact those children have on a local school district. We do not examine the needs of the children. Instead, we attempt to measure how their presence affects a school district. This stems from the fact federally connected parents often do not pay local taxes and yet local school district's are asked to educate their children.

Even worse, we inadequately compensate the local education agencies for the burden they are asked to carry. For far too many years, appropriations have been insufficient to meet the task at hand. Perhaps it is time to change the process even further and place the program at the Department of Defense where it might be fashioned to meet the needs of these children directly, and not simply recognize their existence.

The Department of Defense takes responsibility for the housing of our soldiers and their families, and for their health care. It should, to my mind, assume responsibility for their education as well.

S. 2667. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to clarify the application of the act with respect to alternate uses of new animal drugs and new drugs intended for human use; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ALTERNATE USES OF CERTAIN DRUGS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to induce a bill that will rectify a serious problem facing America's veterinarians and the animals they treat. If the FDA were to strictly enforce the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act as it is written today, the act would prevent the relief of pain and the prevention of suffering in a host of animal species from cattle to pet birds for which there are no FDA approved drugs for these purposes. The legislation I am introducing today would correct this problem by codifying current veterinary practices.

Unique to the practice of veterinary medicine is the abundance of species that the veterinarian encounters in the clinical setting. New animal drugs have been approved for only the most common of domestic species. Few, if any, new animal drugs are approved for species of animals which are used extensively in most of the Nation's research facilities such as mice, rats, hamsters, gerbils, guinea pigs, and rabbits. No other profession is forced to practice under a law which is contrary to and defeats the purpose of the professional's oath.

Current veterinary practices permit extra-label drug use because insufficient therapies are approved to treat the conditions that veterinarians routinely face in practice. Examples for companion animals include insulin to treat diabetes, cardiac, and chemotherapeutic drugs that bear a human drug label; anesthetic, analgesic, and sedative agents for food animals; and effective antibiotics for food and companion animals to name just a few.

Veterinarians use drugs in an extra-label manner to save animal lives, prevent suffering and to protect human health. Treatment of sick food-producing animals results in increased levels of food safety because sick animals will not be shipped to market. If legal therapies are not available to veterinarians, producers may feel compelled to ship sick animals to market, rather than watch them suffer and perhaps die, or take a chance that they may infect the remainder of the herd.

This legislation which would permit extra-label drug use will transform this section of the FD&C Act from a non-enforceable, confusing law into a clear and easily enforceable statute. Violators who cause the presence of illegal residues in food can then be prosecuted appropriately.

This bill codifies current FDA policy and authorizes extra-label drug use by veterinarians only, under carefully controlled supervision and will not result in increased violative residues in food products. It will not increase or alter overall patterns of drug usage by veterinarians.

The law as it exists today is contrary to its own basic purpose of protecting the public health. For example, chlamydiosis—a disease which is transmitted from birds to man—is most effectively treated in birds with an antibiotic known as doxycycline. This drug presently is only approved for use in humans. The only FDA approved animal drug for the treatment of chlamydiosis in birds is no longer marketed. Without the ability of the veterinarian to use a human label drug on a non-food producing animal, there will be an increased risk of transmission of this disease between bird and man.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to move expeditiously on this urgently needed legislation.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I join Senator HEFLIN and others in introducing legislation clarifying Food and Drug Administration [FDA] procedures regarding extra-label use of animal drugs. The bill is a simple and straightforward approach to resolving the current conflict between modern veterinary medicine and the law.

The issue is extra-label drug use of animal drugs. This is an important issue for South Dakota's 36,000 farmers and ranchers and my State's veterinarians and consumers as well. After visiting with several veterinarians and discussing their daily routines and practices, I became convinced that extra-label drug use is necessary. This is because currently approved therapies are insufficient to treat the conditions veterinarians routinely face in practice. All too often, veterinarians face situations in which an animal's health is immediately threatened and suffering or death would result from failure to provide prompt and effective treatment.

The problem in existing law is that it prohibits the use of an animal drug for purposes other than those listed on the drug's label. The reality is that it is not economically feasible under the present animal drug approval process to seek an approved label for all species and uses for which a drug is beneficial and safe. If a veterinarian is working to save the life of a cow or calf and the only effective treatment is a drug labeled only for horses, the letter of the law says a veterinarian cannot use the drug to save the cow or calf. This bill rectifies that situation and would allow the veterinarian to save the life of the animal without being in conflict with the law.

Mr. President, the FDA recognizes the fact that a veterinarian, on occasion, will find it necessary to use an approved drug in a manner that does not appear on the label. In fact, the FDA has gone so far as to state it will not institute regulatory action against licensed veterinarians for using or prescribing any drugs legally obtained. Thus, this bill simply codifies existing FDA practice.

This Nation's veterinarians use drugs in an extra-label manner to save animals' lives, prevent suffering and to protect human health. This bill would provide the FDA a clear, easily enforceable statute. The bill would allow the FDA to develop practical and constructive regulations to enhance its ability to define violations of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. It also would resolve existing conflicts between modern veterinary medicine and the law.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to take a close look at this bill and support its passage. The bill has the support of veterinarians in South Dakota and the American Veterinary Medical Association.

By Mr. CRAIG (for himself, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. HATCH):

S.J. Res. 298. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for a balanced budget for the U.S. Government and for greater accountability in the enactment of tax legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR A BALANCED FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, this morning during morning business it is my intent to introduce an amendment to the U.S. Constitution, an amendment that I have worked on with a good many others for a long while, an amendment to our Constitution that would require the Congress of the United States to provide a balanced budget on an annual basis.

The gross Federal debt today tops $4 trillion. Yesterday was tax freedom day for the American taxpayer, in other words, if you used all of your money up until yesterday you would have paid your taxes, and starting today you are no longer working for the Federal Government, you are working for yourself. That statement along with a $4 trillion debt means that $45,000 is owed by every American household as a debt in response to the debt of this Nation. Federal interest payments in 1992 are $201 billion; 40 percent of all personal income tax this year was dedicated to that, all of the personal income tax collected west of the Mississippi dedicated to interest on that debt structure.

Three weeks ago in a budget resolution debate here on the floor, we recognized that $297 billion would be used for interest on debt structure in this coming fiscal year. The 1992 deficit as projected per CBO figures would be about $350 billion assuming that we comply with the caps, about $400 billion on off-budget.

Does anybody even question why I and others would want to see our Federal budget balanced? Starting 8 years ago when I was a Member of the other body, I, along with a Congressman from Texas, CHARLIE STENHOLM, began a crusade nationwide for a balanced budget. The work product that I am introducing today is the effort of years and years of involvement by citizens, by legal scholars, to attempt to craft an amendment that in fact would work, that would recognize all of the frailties and the importance of writing the right language for the citizens of this country and the States to review and respond to and ratify as a legitimate and functioning amendment of our Constitution.

While we were working over there, and prior to my election to this body, Senators like Senator THURMOND, Senator SIMON, Senator HATCH, and others were working here. I am a cosponsor of those work efforts here. Senate Joint Resolution 18 by Senator SIMON and Senator THURMOND that was reported out of the Judiciary Committee, and as we know this body and its leadership has now suggested by late month or early next month we will have a vote on this amendment.

But the reason I am introducing the amendment that I have worked on and others is because I think it is important that all of these issues be on the floor, that all of this body have an opportunity to look at the variations and the ideas that their fellow legislators have come up with as it relates to this most important and critical issue of a balanced budget amendment to our Constitution.

The one that I am introducing today will be the vehicle of debate. It will be the final work product that is voted on by the House, and I would believe to be voted on by possibly during this month. It now has over 275 cosponsors. There is an enthusiasm and excitement growing over there, over in the House, that that vote will occur, even the Speaker himself has said that it more than likely will occur sometime this spring.

I am one of those who, unlike many of the critics, believe it will work. I believe it is time that this Congress recognizes that it cannot solve its own problems, that it is individually and collectively too committed to programs, systems, Government departments that dedicate or ensure that a majority of this body will work to perpetuate the status quo which represents that $320-plus billion deficit and $4 trillion debt. It is not a surprise that well over 75 percent of the American people, for better than a decade, have argued that this Congress must balance its budget, and they as citizens are demanding it.

Now I would have to say that in the process of amending the Constitution it is not that we the Congress will amend it, not at all. Article V of the Constitution provides two approaches. One that allows the Congress to recommend or propose to the citizenry of this country an amendment. The other is to allow the citizens collectively to convene a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing and developing an amendment.

I prefer the first route. I believe it is a responsible and reasonable effort on the part of this Congress to propose that amendment, and that is what I hope we will do this year, 1992, propose a working and functional amendment to the citizens of this country and then allow the debate to go on in the some 50 States that it must go on in across this country to require the necessary three-fourths or 38 States through their legislatures to review it and ultimately to ratify it.

That debate that will be going on once we have sent forth the proposed amendment will be in my opinion one of the most important national debates that could go on. The average citizen for the first time can truly become engaged in why this Government is spending like it is spending, why there are programs of the nature that this Congress, the House and the Senate, have collectively devised, and why we cannot at this time, by all appearances, control a budget. It is now important that the citizens become directly involved by making the structural change necessary in our system of Government to reinstate the political will to be fiscally responsible.

Many citizens say out there, "Why don't you do it; just do it?"

I think if they watched us closely they will find there are too many in this body and the other that are incapable of making those kinds of tough decisions, because of all the interest groups, private and public, that apply the pressures that they can in the decisionmaking process on the budgets that fund the systems of Government that are now driving us towards an all-time high debt and an all-time high deficit, and clearly endangering the economy of this country and the vitality of that economy to produce the job base that our free and private citizenry demands.

So today I am introducing a Senate joint resolution, a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget that will do a variety of things that I think are important. It will, by its nature, require recorded votes by a constitutional majority—in other words, not just a majority of this body assembled, but 50 percent plus 1 of this body's total number—in increasing taxes.

My amendment would also require that the legislative and the executive branch come together by a majority vote each year on a revenue statement as to the revenues that would be collected and therefore spent by the Government.

My amendment also requires a three-fifths vote to lift the debt ceiling or, in essence, to allow increased borrowing capability of the Federal Government.

So it is clearly one that recognizes the importance of putting checks and limitations on the process itself because I am one of those who believes that we will not resort to taxes to balance the budget. We will resort to reductions in growth rates of spending.

In the some 20 to 24 months that the States will be reviewing this amendment and moving toward its ratification, it will become the responsibilities of the Senate and the House, working with the executive branch of Government, to build a process that will bring our budget into balance by fiscal 1997 if this amendment or one like it is passed this year.

It also does exactly what I and Senator BYRD debated on this floor some 3 to 4 weeks ago—that the executive branch of Government must clearly be engaged in this process; that the President of the United States must be a direct participant, and the executive branch, like the legislative branch, must shoulder the burden of balancing the Federal budget, and from that point forward, submitting balanced budgets consistent with the constitutional requirement that would be provided by this amendment.

I believe the time is now. I think the American people are speaking more loudly than they have ever spoken before about the issue of fiscal responsibility and the impact of debt and deficit on the economy of this country, the well-being of its citizens and the vitality of the workplace.

If we do not act this year, Mr. President, we will be sending forth a message to future generations that while we will bask in the largess of the Public Treasury, the uncontrolled spending of this Government, we will ask young people to shoulder the burden of payment of that debt. I do not want to leave that legacy for my children and I cannot believe that any responsible adult, whether he or she be private citizen or elected public official, would likewise want to leave that legacy to theirs.

It is a national responsibility but it is a responsibility that starts here on the floor of this Senate and on the floor of the House in the collective Congress to allow the citizens of this country to effect a change in their Constitution and therefore in the structuring of their Government that will require this body, as it must annually do, to put forth a budget to run this Government that is in balance to the best of the capability and the talents of the agencies and the systems involved consistent with the Constitution of the United States.

So I challenge all Senators to become engaged with us, those who will be leading the debate on the balanced budget amendment in the coming days on the floor or this Senate.

And I would ask the leader of the Senate, as he has spoken to the issue before, to honor his commitment to the parties involved and to honor the sense-of-the-Senate resolution that passed just a few weeks ago that we should debate this issue and vote it up or down, the issue of a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget.

I submit that amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. Res. 298

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the Senate for ratification:

Total outlays for that year shall not exceed the level of estimated receipts set forth in such law, unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House of Congress shall provide, by a rollcall vote, for a specific excess of outlays over estimated receipts.

SECTION 2. The limit on the debt of the United States held by the public shall not be increased unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House shall provide by law for such an increase by a rollcall vote.

SECTION 3. Prior to each fiscal year, the President shall transmit to the congress a proposed budget for the United States Government for that fiscal year in which total outlays do not exceed total receipts.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 113—RELATING TO THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE REUNIFICATION OF JERUSALEM

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and for Mr. PACKWOOD) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 113

Whereas, for 3,000 years Jerusalem has been the focal point of Jewish religious devotion;

Whereas, Jerusalem is also considered a holy city by the members of other religious faiths;

Whereas, the once thriving Jewish majority of the historic Old City of Jerusalem was driven out by force during the 1948 Arab-Israeli War;

Whereas, from 1948 to 1967 Jerusalem was a divided city and Israeli citizens of all faiths as well as Jewish citizens of all states were denied access to holy sites in the area controlled by Jordan;

Whereas, in 1967 Jerusalem was reunited during the conflict known as the Six Day War;

Whereas, since 1967 Jerusalem has been a united city administered by Israel and persons of all religious faiths have been guaranteed full access to holy sites within the city;

Whereas, this year marks the twenty-fifth year that Jerusalem has been administered as a unified city in which the rights of all faiths have been respected and protected;

Whereas, in 1990 the United States Senate and House of Representatives overwhelmingly adopted Senate Concurrent Resolution 106 and House Concurrent Resolution 290 declaring that Jerusalem, the capitol of Israel, "must remain an undivided city";

Whereas, subsequent statements by the Government of the United States, including support for United Nations Security Council Resolutions 681 and 726, have raised understandable concern in Israel that Jerusalem might one day be redivided and access to religious sites in Jerusalem denied to Israeli citizens of all faiths and Jewish citizens of other states;

Whereas, such concerns inhibit and complicate the search for a lasting peace in the region: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) congratulates the residents of Jerusalem and the people of Israel on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the reunification of that historic city;

(2) strongly believes that Jerusalem must remain an undivided city in which the rights of every ethnic and religious group are protected as they have been by Israel during the past 25 years; and,

(3) call upon the President and the Secretary of State to issue an unequivocal statement in support of these principles.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] and I are submitting a concurrent resolution which congratulates the residents of Jerusalem and the citizens of Israel on the 25th anniversary of the reunification of Jerusalem during the Six-Day War. The resolution also contains the elemental proposition that Jerusalem must never be divided again.

In January 1990, I traveled to the Middle East in my capacity as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs. While I was in Israel, I met with a broad cross-section of Israeli political and communal leaders and found that they had many different views on the peace process. There were, however, two things on which they all agreed: Their desire to see a meaningful and secure peace between Israel and her Arab neighbors and their anguish over the continued confusion of American policy concerning the city of Jerusalem.

Since that time, events have only served, I fear, to heighten the legitimate concern in Israel over United States policy toward Jerusalem. Despite Israel's staunch support during the Persian Gulf war—a war unrelated to Israel's disputes with its neighbors which nonetheless brought terror pouring down from the skies on the innocent civilians of Israel—the United States supported not one but two Security Council resolutions—Resolution 681 and Resolution 726—which describe Jerusalem as "occupied Palestinian territory." Resolution 726 also strongly condemns Israel, language which is considerably stronger than any used by the Security Council to condemn Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. In fact, only once during the entire Persian Gulf crisis did the Security Council use such language to condemn Saddam Hussein, and that only when he committed gross crimes against humanity by rounding up human shield hostages and besieging diplomatic facilities.

We were far too passive in May 1948, when the Jordanian Arab Legion drove the once flourishing Jewish majority out of the Old City at gunpoint. We were too passive when Jerusalem was divided by barbed wire, mine fields, and cinder block walls. I declared 2 years ago that President Bush's statements and policies "raise the frightful irony that a President who only 4 months ago celebrated the collapse of the Berlin Wall and the opening of the Brandenberg Gate might encourage the redivision of Jerusalem and the reimposition of the infamous Mandelbaum Gate."

Israel must make sacrifices for there to be peace in the Middle East. Yet no Israeli Government will continue to participate in a process which it believes might end with the dismemberment of Jerusalem.

We would do well to remember that the Jewish presence in Jerusalem is not new. No people on earth are as inexorably linked to any city as the Jewish people are to the city of Jerusalem. For more than three millennia, ever since King David declared it the capital of his Jewish Kingdom and bought the land on which his son Solomon would build his temple, Jerusalem has been the spiritual and cultural focal point of Jewish history. Yet Jerusalem's significance to the Jew goes back even further, for Jewish tradition states that Solomon's Temple was built on the very spot where Abraham was prepared to sacrifice his son Isaac and where Jacob, the third of the Patriarchs, dreamt of a ladder connecting Heaven and Earth.

For 2,600 years Jerusalem has not been forgotten. The devout Jew prays six times a day—thrice in his daily payers and thrice at grace—for the city of Jerusalem. No Jewish religious ceremony is complete without mention of the Holy City. And twice a year, at the conclusion of the Passover Seder and the Day of Atonement services, all assembled repeat one of mankind's shortest and oldest prayers: "Next Year in Jerusalem."

Not only is Jerusalem central to Jewish prayer and religious practice but Jews throughout the centuries have risked their very lives to be able to live in, or at least visit, their Holy City. Conquering armies came and went—Roman, Byzantine, Arab, Crusader, Mongol, and Turk—but the Jewish community, despite depravation and persecution, remained in Jerusalem. Indeed, the first authoritative Turkish census of the city, in 1884 discovered that 7,120 of Jerusalem's 12,510 inhabitants were Jewish—and this before there was a "west" or "new" Jerusalem. Thus even the Old City of Jerusalem had a Jewish majority well over a century ago.

Likewise, the city of Jerusalem has a powerful religious significance for persons of other religions. These attachments—themselves stretching back over the millennia—make Jerusalem a unique and treasured city to persons around the world.

Thus, the division of Jerusalem after the 1948 war in which Israel's Arab neighbors determined to wipe out the fledgling Jewish state and drove the Jewish population of Jerusalem out of the city at gunpoint was especially painful. The subsequent years of Jordanian desecration of holy sites and adamant refusal to permit access to sacred places under Jordanian control was a sorry period indeed. Thus it is that we celebrate the reunification of this holy city and its magnanimous administration by the Government of Israel. This is not just a moment for the people of Israel, or Jews around the world, to celebrate. Everyone who believes that the rights of persons of all faiths should be respected have good reason to celebrate 25 years of Israeli governance and to congratulate the residents of Jerusalem on the fact that their city is no longer divided by barbed wire.

It is interesting to note that in 1980 President Bush criticized the Carter administration for sending mixed signals about Jerusalem. He claimed that they "undermined confidence in America's policy and purpose in the Middle East." Specifically, in a campaign speech delivered on October 19, 1980, he told the Zionist Organization of America that "I need to detail the recent history of mixed signals delivered in the United Nations and elsewhere around the world concerning the Carter administration's policy on such issues as the PLO and the status of Jerusalem. They are only too well known. Nor need I stress that though these signals are mixed, they assume a pattern that has undermined confidence in America's policy and purpose in the Middle East."

Mr. President, I call upon the administration to embrace the principles of this resolution: To celebrate the reunification of Jerusalem and to pledge that it will never again be divided and I invite my colleagues to join with me and the Senator from Oregon as cosponsor of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, 25 years ago, a holy city to three great religions became accessible to the people of those religions. As a result of the Six-Day War in 1967, the gates of Jerusalem were opened to Moslems, Christians, and Jews from all over the world. This stands in contrast to the years of Jordanian control which lasted from 1948 to 1967, when free access to the holy sites of these religions was only a dream.

Since 1967, Jerusalem has been administered as a unified city in which the rights of all faiths have been respected and protected. The 25th anniversary also marks a time of great hope. It is a year when Israel and its neighbors are working toward a real and lasting peace in the region. As the world watches this complicated process, one can only sense that returning to the divisions and restrictions of pre-1967 Jerusalem will inhibit the search for peace.

The resolution we submit today recognizes the citizens who have made a unified Jerusalem a place for people of all faiths. These citizens include the 1967 Golani brigade soldiers who fought in the corridors of the ancient city, as well as the 1992 social workers who teach Jewish and Arab children to respect and understand their similarities and differences.

The resolution also states that Jerusalem should remain an undivided city, and urges the President and Secretary of State to support these principles. As the peace talks continue, many people fear that the world is encouraging a peace which includes a redivided Jerusalem—and with it, a return to the restrictions of 25 years ago. To me, this doesn't sound like progress. A lasting peace will come by cooperation, not further division.

I hope my colleagues will join us in supporting this resolution.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 114—RELATIVE TO CONGRESSIONAL PAY

Mr. NICKLES submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. CON. RES. 114

Whereas on September 25, 1789, the Congress sent to the States for ratification a proposed amendment designed to limit the power of the Congress to raise the salaries of its Members;

Whereas this proposed amendment was introduced by James Madison as the 2nd of 12 amendments, 10 of which eventually became the Bill of Rights;

Whereas this amendment reads as follows: "Article II. No law varying the compensation for the services of Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened";

Whereas this amendment failed to be adopted by the necessary 11 States and become part of the Constitution;

Whereas more than 200 years later, 37 States have ratified this amendment to the Constitution (Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming); and

Whereas this amendment to the Constitution was proposed without a deadline for ratification and is therefore still pending before the States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (The House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that at least 1 of the remaining 13 states should ratify the proposed 2nd amendment to the Constitution which would delay the effect of any law which varies the compensation of Members of Congress until after the next election of Representatives (these States being California, Hawaii, Illinois, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Washington).

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, yesterday, the States of Missouri and Alabama became the 36th and 37th States to ratify the original second amendment to the Constitution. That amendment, one of the original 12, reads as follows:

Article II. No law varying the compensation for the services of Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

Thirty-eight States are required to ratify an amendment before it becomes part of the Constitution. Currently, the States of New Jersey, Illinois, and Michigan have resolutions of ratification under consideration.

This is a fair and equitable approach in handling congressional pay. This is attested to by the fact that the framers of our Constitution seriously considered its inclusion. Today, Congress faces a tremendous credibility gap and this is one reform that can help bridge that gap.

By requiring a pay increase to go into effect after the ensuing election of Representatives, Members will not benefit from that raise until the voters have spoken.

This so-called Madison amendment was first introduced on September 25, 1789 along with 11 other amendments that were proposed for inclusion in the just-created Constitution. Ten of these amendments were adopted and are known as the Bill of Rights.

When the amendment was first considered by the States, it fell four states short needed for inclusion in the Constitution. We now have the opportunity to see this amendment added as part of the Constitution and restore some of the integrity to our representative form of government.

I also ask that the resolution adopted by the Oklahoma State Legislature and transmitted to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee on October 17, 1985, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

"RESOLUTION NO. 1016

"Whereas, a resolution of the First Congress of the United States, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to restrict the effective date of any law which would change the amount of compensation received by United States Senators and Representatives, was approved by the Congress, two-thirds (⅔) of each house concurring therein, in the following words:

"(An ARTICLE) in addition to, and Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress, and ratified by the Legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth Article of the original Constitution.

"Article ... No law, varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives, shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened."

"Now, therefore, be it resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the 1st session of the 40th Oklahoma Legislature:

"Section 1. The amendment to the Constitution of the United States to restrict the effective date of any law which would change the amount of compensation received by United States Senators and Representatives, proposed by a resolution of the First Congress of the United States, is hereby ratified.

"Section 2. Pursuant to 75 O.S. 1981, Section 26.42, this resolution shall expire on December 31, 1995.

"Section 3. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution shall be transmitted to the Governor of the State of Oklahoma, to the President of the United States, to the Administrator of General Services of the United States, to the President Pro Tempore of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States."

"(A) the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, the Vice President-elect, the Vice President-designate, or, if there was no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of the President of the United States, or any person acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States;

"(B) a chief of state, head of government, or the political equivalent, of a foreign nation;

"(C) a foreign official listed in section 1116(b)(3)(A), if that official was in the United States on official business; or

"(D) a Federal public servant who was outside of the United States or who was a Federal judge, a Federal law enforcement officer, an employee (including a volunteer or contract employee) of a Federal prison, or an official of the Federal Bureau of Prisons—

"(i) while such public servant was engaged in the performance of his official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of such public servant's official duties; or

"(iii) because of such public servant's status as a public servant.

For purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'President-elect' and 'Vice President-elect' mean such persons as are the apparent successful candidates for the offices of President and Vice President, respectively, as ascertained from the results of the general elections held to determine the electors of President and Vice President in accordance with sections 1 and 2 of title 3; a 'Federal law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a Government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution of an offense; 'Federal prison' means a Federal correctional, detention, or penal facility, Federal community treatment center, or Federal halfway house, or any such prison operated under contract with the Federal Government; and 'Federal judge' means any judicial officer of the United States, and includes a justice of the Supreme Court and a United States magistrate judge.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"(d) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR DRUG OFFENSE DEATH PENALTY.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591 (3), (4), or (5), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OFFENSE FOR WHICH A SENTENCE OF DEATH OR LIFE IMPRISONMENT WAS AUTHORIZED.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another Federal or State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute.

"(2) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OTHER SERIOUS OFFENSES.—The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more Federal or State offenses, each punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the importation, manufacture, or distribution of a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)) or the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury or death upon another person.

"(3) PREVIOUS SERIOUS DRUG FELONY CONVICTION.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another Federal or State offense involving the manufacture, distribution, importation, or possession of a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)) for which a sentence of five or more years of imprisonment was authorized by statute.

"(4) USE OF FIREARM.—In committing the offense, or in furtherance of a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, the defendant used a firearm or knowingly directed, advised, authorized, or assisted another to use a firearm (as defined in section 921) to threaten, intimidate, assault, or injure a person.

"(5) DISTRIBUTION TO PERSONS UNDER 21.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved conduct proscribed by section 418 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 859) which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of this title.

"(6) DISTRIBUTION NEAR SCHOOLS.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved conduct proscribed by section 419 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 860) which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of this title.

"(7) USING MINORS IN TRAFFICKING.—The offense, or a continuing criminal enterprise of which the offense was a part, involved conduct proscribed by section 420 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 861) which was committed directly by the defendant or for which the defendant would be liable under section 2 of this title.

"(8) LETHAL ADULTERANT.—The offense involved the importation, manufacture, or distribution of a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)), mixed with a potentially lethal adulterant, and the defendant was aware of the presence of the adulterant.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor exists.

"§ 3593. Special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) NOTICE BY THE GOVERNMENT.—Whenever the Government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense described in section 3591, the attorney for the Government, a reasonable time before the trial, or before acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, or at such time thereafter as the court may permit upon a showing of good cause, shall sign and file with the court, and serve on the defendant, a notice that the Government in the event of conviction will seek the sentence of death. The notice shall set forth the aggravating factor or factors enumerated in section 3592, and any other aggravating factor not specifically enumerated in section 3592, that the Government, if the defendant is convicted, will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty. The factors for which notice is provided under this subsection may include factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family. The court may permit the attorney for the Government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(b) HEARING BEFORE A COURT OR JURY.—When the attorney for the Government has filed a notice as required under subsection (a) and the defendant is found guilty of an offense described in section 3591, the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or another judge if that judge is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. Prior to such a hearing, no presentence report shall be prepared by the United States Probation Service, notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(1) before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt;

"(2) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(A) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(B) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(C) the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause; or

"(D) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, reconsideration of the sentence under the section is necessary; or

"(3) before the court alone, upon motion of the defendant and with the approval of the attorney for the Government.

A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (2) shall consist of 12 members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate, with the approval of the court, that it shall consist of a lesser number.

"(c) PROOF OF MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—At the hearing, information may be presented as to—

"(1) any matter relating to any mitigating factor listed in section 3592 and any other mitigating factor; and

"(2) any matter relating to any aggravating factor listed in section 3592 for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) and (if information is presented relating to such a listed factor) any other aggravating factor for which notice has been so provided.

The information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the Government or the defendant. The information presented by the Government in support of factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family may include oral testimony, a victim impact statement that identifies the victim of the offense and the nature and extent of harm and loss suffered by the victim and the victim's family, and other relevant information. Information is admissible regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The attorney for the Government and for the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The attorney for the Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of an aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(d) Return of Special Findings.—The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors set forth in section 3592 found to exist and any other aggravating factor for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) found to exist. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more members of the jury, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such factor established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established. A finding with respect to any aggravating factor must be unanimous. If no aggravating factor set forth in section 3592 is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence other than death authorized by law.

"(e) Return of a Finding Concerning a Sentence of Death.—If, in the case of—

"(1) an offense described in section 3591(1), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(b) is found to exist;

"(2) an offense described in section 3591 (2) or (6), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(c) is found to exist; or the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factor or factors found to exist under subsection (d) outweigh any mitigating factor or factors. The jury, or if there is no jury, the court shall recommend a sentence of death if it unanimously finds at least one aggravating factor and no mitigating factor or if it finds one or more aggravating factors which outweigh any mitigating factors. In any other case, it shall not recommend a sentence of death. The jury shall be instructed that it must avoid any influence of sympathy, sentiment, passion, prejudice, or other arbitrary factors in its decision, and should make such a recommendation as the information warrants.

"(3) an offense described in section 3591 (3), (4), or (5), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(d) is found to exist,

"(f) Special Precaution To Assure Against Discrimination.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, prior to the return of a finding under subsection (e), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether a sentence of death is justified, it shall not be influenced by prejudice or bias relating to the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim may be. The jury, upon return of a finding under subsection (e), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that prejudice or bias relating to the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim was not involved in reaching his or her individual decision and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regarding a sentence for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim may be.

"§ 3594. Imposition of a sentence of death

"Upon the recommendation under section 3593(e) that a sentence of death be imposed, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offense is life imprisonment, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of release.

"§ 3595. Review of a sentence of death

"(a) Appeal.—In a case in which a sentence of death is imposed, the sentence shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal of the sentence must be filed within the time specified for the filing of a notice of appeal of the judgment of conviction. An appeal of the sentence under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all other cases.

"(b) Review.—The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case, including—

"(1) the evidence submitted during the trial;

"(2) the information submitted during the sentencing hearing;

"(3) the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing; and

"(c) Decision and Disposition.—

"(1) Affirmance.—If the court of appeals determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor;

"(B) the evidence and information support the special findings of the existence of an aggravating factor or factors; and

"(C) the proceedings did not involve any other prejudicial error requiring reversal of the sentence that was properly preserved for and raised on appeal, it shall affirm the sentence.

"(2) Remand.—In a case in which the sentence is not affirmed under paragraph (1), the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593 or for imposition of another authorized sentence as appropriate, except that the court shall not reverse a sentence of death on the ground that an aggravating factor was invalid or was not supported by the evidence and information if at least one aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592 remains which was found to exist and the court, on the basis of the evidence submitted at trial and the information submitted at the sentencing hearing, finds no mitigating factor or finds that the remaining aggravating factor or factors which were found to exist outweigh any mitigating factors.

"(3) Statement of Reasons.—The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"§ 3596. Implementation of a sentence of death

"(a) In General.—A person who has been sentenced to death pursuant to this chapter shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and for review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States Marshal, who shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If the law of such State does not provide for implementation of a sentence of death, the court shall designate another State, the law of which does so provide, and the sentence shall be implemented in the manner prescribed by such law.

"(b) Special Bars To Execution.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who lacks the mental capacity to understand the death penalty and why it was imposed on that person, or upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(c) Employees May Decline To Participate.—No employee of any State department of corrections, the Federal Bureau of Prisons, or the United States Marshals Service, and no employee providing services to that department, bureau, or service under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participate in any execution' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for the execution, and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"§ 3597. Use of State facilities

"A United States Marshal charged with supervising the implementation of a sentence of death may use appropriate State or local facilities for the purpose, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs for the purpose, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"§ 3598. Appointment of counsel

"(a) Representation of Indigent Defendants.—This section shall govern the appointment of counsel for any defendant against whom a sentence of death is sought, or on whom a sentence of death has been imposed, for an offense against the United States, where the defendant is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation. Such a defendant shall be entitled to appointment of counsel from the commencement of trial proceedings until one of the conditions specified in section 3599(b) has occurred. This section shall not affect the appointment of counsel and the provision of ancillary legal services under section 408(q) (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848 (q) (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), and (10)).

"(b) Representation Before Finality of Judgment.—A defendant within the scope of this section shall have counsel appointed for trial representation as provided in section 3005. At least 1 counsel so appointed shall continue to represent the defendant until the conclusion of direct review of the judgment, unless replaced by the court with other qualified counsel.

"(c) Representation After Finality of Judgment.—When a judgment imposing a sentence of death has become final through affirmance by the Supreme Court on direct review, denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on direct review, or expiration of the time for seeking direct review in the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, the Government shall promptly notify the district court that imposed the sentence. Within 10 days after receipt of such notice, the district court shall proceed to make a determination whether the defendant is eligible under this section for appointment of counsel for subsequent proceedings. On the basis of the determination, the court shall issue an order—

"(1) appointing 1 or more counsel to represent the defendant upon a finding that the defendant is financially unable to obtain adequate representation and wishes to have counsel appointed or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject appointment of counsel;

"(2) finding, after a hearing if necessary, that the defendant rejected appointment of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or

"(3) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant is financially able to obtain adequate representation.

Counsel appointed pursuant to this subsection shall be different from the counsel who represented the defendant at trial and on direct review unless the defendant and counsel request a continuation or renewal of the earlier representation.

"(d) Standards for Competence of Counsel.—In relation to a defendant who is entitled to appointment of counsel under this section, at least 1 counsel appointed for trial representation must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the trial of felony cases in the federal district courts. If new counsel is appointed after judgment, at least 1 counsel so appointed must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the litigation of felony cases in the Federal courts of appeals or the Supreme Court. The court, for good cause, may appoint counsel who does not meet the standards prescribed in the 2 preceding sentences, but whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable him or her to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the penalty and the nature of the litigation.

"(f) Claims of Ineffectiveness of Counsel.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during proceedings on a motion under section 2255 of title 28 in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief from the judgment or sentence in any proceeding. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any stage of the proceedings.

"§ 3599. Collateral attack on judgment imposing sentence of death

"(a) Time for Making Section 2255 Motion.—In a case in which a sentence of death has been imposed, and the judgment has become final as described in section 3598(c), a motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28 shall be filed within 90 days of the issuance of the order relating to appointment of counsel under section 3598(c). The court in which the motion is filed, for good cause shown, may extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 60 days. A motion described in this section shall have priority over all noncapital matters in the district court, and in the court of appeals on review of the district court's decision.

"(b) Stay of Execution.—The execution of a sentence of death shall be stayed in the course of direct review of the judgment and during the litigation of an initial motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28. The stay shall run continuously following imposition of the sentence, and shall expire if—

"(1) the defendant fails to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28 within the time specified in subsection (a), or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a motion by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2255 of title 28, the motion under that section is denied and—

"(A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed;

"(B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or

"(C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a district court, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of the decision to do so, the defendant waives the right to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28.

"(c) Finality of Decision on Review.—If one of the conditions specified in subsection (b) has occurred, no court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in the case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not presented in earlier proceedings;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim was—

"(A) the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim in earlier proceedings; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"§ 3600. Application in Indian country

"Notwithstanding sections 1152 and 1153, no person subject to the criminal jurisdiction of an Indian tribal government shall be subject to a capital sentence under this chapter for any offense the Federal jurisdiction for which is predicated solely on Indian country as defined in section 1151 and which has occurred within the boundaries of such Indian country, unless the governing body of the tribe has made an election that this chapter have effect over land and persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction.".

"(9) COMMISSION OF THE OFFENSE FOR PECUNIARY GAIN.—The defendant committed the offense as consideration for receiving, or in the expectation of receiving or obtaining, anything of pecuniary value.

"(10) SUBSTANTIAL PLANNING AND PREMEDITATION.—The defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation.

"(12) KILLING OF PUBLIC SERVANT.—The defendant committed the offense against a public servant—

"(i) while such public servant was engaged in the performance of his or her official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of such public servant's official duties; or

"(iii) because of such public servant's status as a public servant.

"(13) KILLING TO INTERFERE WITH OR RETALIATE AGAINST WITNESS.—The defendant committed the offense in order to prevent or inhibit any person from testifying or providing information concerning an offense, or to retaliate against any person for testifying or providing such information.

"(f) NOTICE OF INTENT TO SEEK DEATH PENALTY.—If the government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense under this section, the attorney for the government shall file with the court and serve on the defendant a notice of such intent. The notice shall be provided a reasonable time before the trial or acceptance of a guilty plea, or at such later time as the court may permit for good cause. The notice shall set forth the aggravating factor or factors set forth in subsection (e) and any other aggravating factor or factors that the government will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty. The factors for which notice is provided under this subsection may include factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family. The court may permit the attorney for the government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(g) JUDGE AND JURY AT CAPITAL SENTENCING HEARING.—A hearing to determine whether the death penalty will be imposed for an offense under this section shall be conducted by the judge who presided at trial or accepted a guilty plea, or by another judge if that judge is not available. The hearing shall be conducted before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt if that jury is available. A new jury shall be impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if the defendant pleaded guilty, the trial of guilt was conducted without a jury, the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause, or reconsideration of the sentence is necessary after the initial imposition of a sentence of death. A jury impaneled under this subsection shall have twelve members unless the parties stipulate to a lesser number at any time before the conclusion of the hearing with the approval of the judge. Upon motion of the defendant, with the approval of the attorney for the government, the hearing shall be carried out before the judge without a jury. If there is no jury, references to "the jury" in this section, where applicable, shall be understood as referring to the judge.

"(h) Proof of Mitigating and Aggravating Factors.—No presentence report shall be prepared if a capital sentencing hearing is held under this section. Any information relevant to the existence of mitigating factors, or to the existence of aggravating factors for which notice has been provided under subsection (f), may be presented by either the government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing the admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of creating unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury. The information presented may include trial transcripts and exhibits. The attorney for the government and for the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The attorney for the government shall open the argument, the defendant shall be permitted to reply, and the government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal.

"(i) Findings of Aggravating and Mitigating Factors.—The jury shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors for which notice has been provided under subsection (f) and which the jury unanimously determines have been established by the government beyond a reasonable doubt. A mitigating factor is established if the defendant has proven its existence by a preponderance of the evidence, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of such a factor may regard it as established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established.

"(j) Finding Concerning a Sentence of Death.—If the jury specially finds under subsection (i) that one or more aggravating factors set forth in subsection (e) exist, and the jury further finds unanimously that there are no mitigating factors or that the aggravating factor or factors specially found under subsection (i) outweigh any mitigating factors, then the jury shall recommend a sentence of death. In any other case, the jury shall not recommend a sentence of death. The jury shall be instructed that it must avoid any influence of sympathy, sentiment, passion, prejudice, or other arbitrary factors in its decision, and should make such a recommendation as the information warrants.

"(k) Special Precaution To Assure Against Discrimination.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, before the return of a finding under subsection (j), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether to recommend a sentence of death, it shall not consider the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim, and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for such a crime regardless of the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim. The jury, upon the return of a finding under subsection (j), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim did not affect the juror's individual decision and that the individual juror would have recommended the same sentence for such a crime regardless of the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim.

"(l) Imposition of a Sentence of Death.—Upon a recommendation under subsection (j) that a sentence of death be imposed, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law.

"(m) Review of a Sentence of Death.—

"(1) The defendant may appeal a sentence of death under this section by filing a notice of appeal of the sentence within the time provided for filing a notice of appeal of the judgment of conviction. An appeal of a sentence under this subsection may be consolidated within an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all noncapital matters in the court of appeals.

"(2) The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case including the evidence submitted at trial and information submitted during the sentencing hearing, the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing, and the special findings returned under subsection (i). The court of appeals shall uphold the sentence if it determines that the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor, that the evidence and information support the special findings under subsection (i), and that the proceedings were otherwise free of prejudicial error that was properly preserved for review.

"(3) In any other case, the court of appeals shall remand the case for reconsideration of the sentence or imposition of another authorized sentence as appropriate, except that the court shall not reverse a sentence of death on the ground that an aggravating factor was invalid or was not supported by the evidence and information if at least one aggravating factor described in subsection (e) remains which was found to exist and the court, on the basis of the evidence submitted at trial and the information submitted at the sentencing hearing, finds that the remaining aggravating factor or factors which were found to exist outweigh any mitigating factors. The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"(n) Implementation of Sentence of Death.—A person sentenced to death under this section shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States Marshal. The Marshal shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of a State designated by the court. The Marshal may use State or local facilities, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"(o) Special Bar To Execution.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(p) Conscientious Objection To Participation in Execution.—No employee of any State department of corrections, the United States Marshals Service, or the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and no person providing services to that department, service, or bureau under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participate in any execution' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for the execution, and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"(q) Appointment of Counsel For Indigent Capital Defendants.—A defendant against whom a sentence of death is sought, or on whom a sentence of death has been imposed, under this section, shall be entitled to appointment of counsel from the commencement of trial proceedings until one of the conditions specified in subsection (v) has occurred, if the defendant is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation. Counsel shall be appointed for trial representation as provided in section 3005 of this title, and at least one counsel so appointed shall continue to represent the defendant until the conclusion of direct review of the judgment, unless replaced by the court with other qualified counsel. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the provisions of section 3006A of this title shall apply to appointments under this section.

"(r) Representation After Finality of Judgment.—When a judgment imposing a sentence of death under this section has become final through affirmance by the Supreme Court on direct review, denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court on direct review, or expiration of the time for seeking direct review in the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, the government shall promptly notify the court that imposed the sentence. The court, within 10 days of receipt of such notice, shall proceed to make determination whether the defendant is eligible for appointment of counsel for subsequent proceedings. The court shall issue an order appointing one or more counsel to represent the defendant upon a finding that the defendant is financially unable to obtain adequate representation and wishes to have counsel appointed or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject appointment of counsel. The court shall issue an order denying appointment of counsel upon a finding that the defendant is financially able to obtain adequate representation or that the defendant rejected appointment of counsel with an understanding of the consequences of that decision. Counsel appointed pursuant to this subsection shall be different from the counsel who represented the defendant at trial and on direct review unless the defendant and counsel request a continuation or renewal of the earlier representation.

"(s) Standards For Competence of Counsel.—In relation to a defendant who is entitled to appointment of counsel under subsections (q)–(r), at least one counsel appointed for trial representation must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least three years of experience in the trial of felony cases in the Federal district courts. If new counsel is appointed after judgment, at least one counsel so appointed must have been admitted to the bar for at least 5 years and have at least 3 years of experience in the litigation of felony cases in the Federal courts of appeals or the Supreme Court. The court, for good cause, may appoint counsel who does not meet these standards, but whose background, knowledge, or experience would otherwise enable him or her to properly represent the defendant, with due consideration of the seriousness of the penalty and the nature of the litigation.

"(t) Claims of Ineffectiveness of Counsel in Collateral Proceedings.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during proceedings on a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, in a case under this section shall not be a ground for relief from the judgment or sentence in any proceeding. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel at any stage of the proceedings.

"(u) TIME FOR COLLATERAL ATTACK ON DEATH SENTENCE.—A motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, attacking a sentence of death under this section, or the conviction on which it is predicated, must be filed within 90 days of the issuance of the order under subsection (r) appointing or denying the appointment of counsel for such proceedings. The court in which the motion is filed, for good cause shown, may extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 60 days. Such a motion shall have priority over all non-capital matters in the district court, and in the court of appeals on review of the district court's decision.

"(v) STAY OF EXECUTION.—The execution of a sentence of death under this section shall be stayed in the course of direct review of the judgment and during the litigation of an initial motion in the case under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. The stay shall run continuously following imposition of the sentence and shall expire if—

"(1) the defendant fails to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, within the time specified in subsection (u), or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a motion by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, the Supreme Court disposes of a petition for certiorari in a manner that leaves the capital sentence undisturbed, or the defendant fails to file a timely petition for certiorari; or

"(3) before a district court, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of such a decision, the defendant waives the right to file a motion under section 2255 of title 28, United States Code.

"(w) FINALITY OF THE DECISION ON REVIEW.—If one of the conditions specified in subsection (v) has occurred, no court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in the case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not presented in earlier proceedings;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim is the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, the result of the Supreme Court's recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable, or the result of the fact that the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim in earlier proceedings; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"(x) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) 'State' has the meaning given in section 513 of this title, including the District of Columbia;

"(2) 'Offense', as used in paragraphs (2), (5), and (13) of subsection (e), and in paragraph (5) of this subsection, means an offense under the law of the District of Columbia, another State, or the United States;

"(10) 'Public servant' means an employee, agent, officer, or official of the District of Columbia, another State, or the United States, or an employee, agent, officer, or official of a foreign government who is within the scope of section 1116 of this title.

"(y) When an offense is charged under this section, the government may join any charge under the District of Columbia Code that arises from the same incident."; and

"An appeal may not be taken to the court of appeals from the final order in a habeas corpus proceeding where the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, or from the final order in a proceeding under section 2255, unless a circuit justice or judge issues a certificate of probable cause.".

If a request for a certificate of probable cause is addressed to the court of appeals, it shall be deemed addressed to the judges thereof and shall be considered by a circuit judge or judges as the court deems appropriate. If no express request for a certificate is filed, the notice of appeal shall be deemed to constitute a request addressed to the judges of the court of appeals. Subtitle B—Death Penalty Litigation Procedures

SEC. 211. SHORT TITLE FOR SUBTITLE B.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Death Penalty Litigation Procedures Act of 1992".

SEC. 212. DEATH PENALTY LITIGATION PROCEDURES.

(a) ADDITION OF CHAPTER TO TITLE 28, UNITED STATES CODE.—Title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 153 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 154—SPECIAL HABEAS CORPUS PROCEDURES IN CAPITAL CASES

"Sec.
"2256. Prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment.
"2258. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules.
"2260. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable.
"2261. Application to state unitary review procedures.
"2262. Limitation periods for determining petitions.
"2263. Rule of construction.

"§ 2256. Prisoners in State custody subject to capital sentence; appointment of counsel; requirement of rule of court or statute; procedures for appointment

"(a) APPLICATION OF CHAPTER.—This chapter shall apply to cases arising under section 2254 brought by prisoners in State custody who are subject to a capital sentence. It shall apply only if the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) are satisfied.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF APPOINTMENT MECHANISM.—This chapter is applicable if a State establishes by rule of its court of last resort or by statute a mechanism for the appointment, compensation and payment of reasonable litigation expenses of competent counsel in State postconviction proceedings brought by indigent prisoners whose capital convictions and sentences have been upheld on direct appeal to the court of last resort in the State or have otherwise become final for State law purposes. The rule of court or statute must provide standards of competency for the appointment of such counsel.

"(c) OFFER OF COUNSEL.—Any mechanism for the appointment, compensation and reimbursement of counsel as provided in subsection (b) must offer counsel to all State prisoners under capital sentence and must provide for the entry of an order by a court of record—

"(1) appointing 1 or more counsel to represent the prisoner upon a finding that the prisoner is indigent and accepted the offer or is unable competently to decide whether to accept or reject the offer;

"(2) finding, after a hearing if necessary, that the prisoner rejected the offer of counsel and made the decision with an understanding of its legal consequences; or

"(3) denying the appointment of counsel upon a finding that the prisoner is not indigent.

"(d) PREVIOUS REPRESENTATION.—No counsel appointed pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) to represent a State prisoner under capital sentence shall have previously represented the prisoner at trial or on direct appeal in the case for which the appointment is made unless the prisoner and counsel expressly request continued representation.

"(e) NO GROUND FOR RELIEF.—The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during State or Federal collateral postconviction proceedings in a capital case shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under section 2254. This limitation shall not preclude the appointment of different counsel, on the court's own motion or at the request of the prisoner, at any phase of State or Federal postconviction proceedings on the basis of the ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel in such proceedings.

"§ 2257. Mandatory stay of execution; duration; limits on stays of execution; successive petitions

"(a) STAY.—Upon the entry in the appropriate State court of record of an order under section 2256(c), a warrant or order setting an execution date for a State prisoner shall be stayed upon application to any court that would have jurisdiction over any proceedings filed under section 2254. The application must recite that the State has invoked the postconviction review procedures of this chapter and that the scheduled execution is subject to stay.

"(b) EXPIRATION OF STAY.—A stay of execution granted pursuant to subsection (a) shall expire if—

"(1) a State prisoner fails to file a habeas corpus petition under section 2254 within the time required in section 2258, or fails to make a timely application for court of appeals review following the denial of such a petition by a district court;

"(2) upon completion of district court and court of appeals review under section 2254 the petition for relief is denied and—

"(A) the time for filing a petition for certiorari has expired and no petition has been filed;

"(B) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and the Supreme Court denied the petition; or

"(C) a timely petition for certiorari was filed and upon consideration of the case, the Supreme Court disposed of it in a manner that left the capital sentence undisturbed; or

"(3) before a court of competent jurisdiction, in the presence of counsel and after having been advised of the consequences of his decision, a State prisoner under capital sentence waives the right to pursue habeas corpus review under section 2254.

"(c) LIMITATION ON FURTHER STAY.—If one of the conditions in subsection (b) has occurred, no Federal court thereafter shall have the authority to enter a stay of execution or grant relief in a capital case unless—

"(1) the basis for the stay and request for relief is a claim not previously presented in the State or Federal courts;

"(2) the failure to raise the claim is—

"(A) the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim for State or Federal postconviction review; and

"(3) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient, if proven, to undermine the court's confidence in the determination of guilt on the offense or offenses for which the death penalty was imposed.

"§ 2258. Filing of habeas corpus petition; time requirements; tolling rules

"Any petition for habeas corpus relief under section 2254 must be filed in the appropriate district court within 180 days from the filing in the appropriate State court of record of an order under section 2256(c). The time requirements established by this section shall be tolled—

"(1) from the date that a petition for certiorari is filed in the Supreme Court until the date of final disposition of the petition if a State prisoner files the petition to secure review by the Supreme Court of the affirmance of a capital sentence on direct review by the court of last resort of the State or other final State court decision on direct review;

"(2) during any period in which a State prisoner under capital sentence has a properly filed request for postconviction review pending before a State court of competent jurisdiction; if all State filing rules are met in a timely manner, this period shall run continuously from the date that the State prisoner initially files for postconviction review until final disposition of the case by the highest court of the State, but the time requirements established by this section are not tolled during the pendency of a petition for certiorari before the Supreme Court except as provided in paragraph (1); and

"(3) during an additional period not to exceed 60 days, if—

"(A) a motion for an extension of time is filed in the Federal district court that would have proper jurisdiction over the case upon the filing of a habeas corpus petition under section 2254; and

"(B) a showing of good cause is made for the failure to file the habeas corpus petition within the time period established by this section.

"§ 2259. Evidentiary hearings; scope of Federal review; district court adjudication

"(a) Review of Record; Hearing.—Whenever a State prisoner under a capital sentence files a petition for habeas corpus relief to which this chapter applies, the district court shall—

"(1) determine the sufficiency of the record for habeas corpus review based on the claims actually presented and litigated in the State courts except when the prisoner can show that the failure to raise or develop a claim in the State courts is—

"(A) the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(B) the result of the Supreme Court recognition of a new Federal right that is retroactively applicable; or

"(C) based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim for State postconviction review; and

"(2) conduct any requested evidentiary hearing necessary to complete the record for habeas corpus review.

"(b) Adjudication.—Upon the development of a complete evidentiary record, the district court shall rule on the claims that are properly before it, but the court shall not grant relief from a judgment of conviction or sentence on the basis of any claim that was fully and fairly adjudicated in State proceedings.

"§ 2260. Certificate of probable cause inapplicable

"The requirement of a certificate of probable cause in order to appeal from the district court to the court of appeals does not apply to habeas corpus cases subject to this chapter except when a second or successive petition is filed.

"§ 2261. Application to State unitary review procedure

"(a) In General.—For purposes of this section, the term 'unitary review procedure' means a State procedure that authorizes a person under sentence of death to raise, in the course of direct review of the judgment, such claims as could be raised on collateral attack. This chapter shall apply, as provided in this section, in relation to a State unitary review procedure if the State establishes by rule of its court of last resort or by statute a mechanism for the appointment, compensation, and payment of reasonable litigation expenses of competent counsel in the unitary review proceedings, including expenses relating to the litigation of collateral claims in the proceedings. The rule of court or statute must provide standards of competency for the appointment of such counsel.

"(b) Offer of Counsel.—A unitary review procedure, to qualify under this section, must include an offer of counsel following trial for the purpose of representation on unitary review, and entry of an order, as provided in section 2256(c), concerning appointment of counsel or waiver or denial of appointment of counsel for that purpose. No counsel appointed to represent the prisoner in the unitary review proceedings shall have previously represented the prisoner at trial in the case for which the appointment is made unless the prisoner and counsel expressly request continued representation.

"(c) Application of Other Sections.—Sections 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, and 2262 shall apply in relation to cases involving a sentence of death from any State having a unitary review procedure that qualifies under this section. References to State 'post-conviction review' and 'direct review' in those sections shall be understood as referring to unitary review under the State procedure. The references in sections 2257(a) and 2258 to 'an order under section 2256(c)' shall be understood as referring to the post-trial order under subsection (b) concerning representation in the unitary review proceedings, but if a transcript of the trial proceedings is unavailable at the time of the filing of such an order in the appropriate State court, the start of the 180-day limitation period under section 2258 shall be deferred until a transcript is made available to the prisoner or the prisoner's counsel.

"§ 2262. Limitation periods for determining petitions

"(a) In General.—The adjudication of any petition under section 2254 that is subject to this chapter, and the adjudication of any motion under section 2255 by a person under sentence of death, shall be given priority by the district court and by the court of appeals over all noncapital matters. The adjudication of such a petition or motion shall be subject to the following time limitations:

"(1) A Federal district court shall determine such a petition or motion within 110 days of filing.

"(2)(A) The court of appeals shall hear and determine any appeal relating to such a petition or motion within 90 days after the notice of appeal is filed.

"(B) The court of appeals shall decide any application for rehearing en banc within 20 days of the filing of the application unless a responsive pleading is required, in which case the court of appeals shall decide the application within 20 days of the filing of the responsive pleading. If en banc consideration is granted, the en banc court shall determine the appeal within 90 days of the decision to grant such consideration.

"(3) The Supreme Court shall act on any application for a writ of certiorari relating to such a petition or motion within 90 days after the application is filed.

"(b) Application of Section.—The time limitations under subsection (a) shall apply to an initial petition or motion, and to any second or successive petition or motion. The same limitations shall also apply to the redetermination of a petition or motion or related appeal following a remand by the court of appeals or the Supreme Court for further proceedings, and in such a case the limitation period shall run from the date of the remand.

"(c) Rule of Construction.—The time limitations under this section shall not be construed to entitle a petitioner or movant to a stay of execution, to which the petitioner or movant would otherwise not be entitled, for the purpose of litigating any petition, motion, or appeal.

"(d) No Ground for Relief.—The failure of a court to meet or comply with the time limitations under this section shall not be a ground for granting relief from a judgment of conviction or sentence. The State or Government may enforce the time limitations under this section by applying to the court of appeals or the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus.

"(e) Report.—The Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall report annually to Congress on the compliance by the courts with the time limits established in this section.

"§ 2263. Rule of construction

"This chapter shall be construed to promote the expeditious conduct and conclusion of State and Federal court review in capital cases.".

(b) Technical Amendment.—The part analysis for part IV of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to chapter 153 the following new item:

TITLE III—EXCLUSIONARY RULE

SEC. 301. ADMISSIBILITY OF CERTAIN EVIDENCE.

(a) In General.—Chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 3509. Admissibility of evidence obtained by search or seizure

"(a) Evidence Obtained by Objectively Reasonable Search or Seizure.—Evidence that is obtained as a result of a search or seizure shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States on the ground that the search or seizure was in violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, if the search or seizure was carried out in circumstances justifying an objectively reasonable belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment. The fact that evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of the existence of such circumstances.

"(b) Evidence Not Excludable by Statute or Rule.—Evidence shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States on the ground that it was obtained in violation of a statute, an administrative rule or regulation, or a rule of procedure unless exclusion is expressly authorized by statute or by a rule prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority.

"(c) Rule of Construction.—This section shall not be construed to require or authorize the exclusion of evidence in any proceeding.".

Subtitle D—National Child Protection Act

SEC. 741. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 742. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) more than 2,500,000 reports of suspected child abuse and neglect are made each year, and increases have occurred in recent years in the abuse of children by persons who have previously committed crimes of child abuse or other serious crimes;

(2) although the great majority of child care providers are caring and dedicated professionals, child abusers and others who harm or prey on children frequently seek employment in or volunteer for positions that give them access to children;

(3) nearly 6,000,000 children received day care in 1990, and this total is growing rapidly to an estimated 8,000,000 children by 1995;

(4) exposure to child abusers and others who harm or prey on children is harmful to the physical and emotional well-being of children;

(5) there is no reliable, centralized national source through which child care organizations may obtain the benefit of a nationwide criminal background check on persons who provide or seek to provide child care;

(6) some States maintain automated criminal background files and provide criminal history information to child care organizations on persons who provide or seek to provide child care; and

(7) because State and national criminal justice databases are inadequate to permit effective national background checks, persons convicted of crimes of child abuse or other serious crimes may gain employment at a child care organization.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to establish a national system through which child care organizations may obtain the benefit of a nationwide criminal background check to determine if persons who are current or prospective child care providers have committed child abuse crimes or other serious crimes;

(2) to establish minimum criteria for State laws and procedures that permit child care organizations to obtain the benefit of nationwide criminal background checks to determine if persons who are current or prospective child care providers have committed child abuse crimes or other serious crimes;

(3) to provide procedural rights for persons who are subject to nationwide criminal background checks, including procedures to challenge and correct inaccurate background check information;

(4) to establish a national system for the reporting by the States of child abuse crime information; and

(5) to document and study the problem of child abuse by providing statistical and informational data on child abuse and related crimes to the Department of Justice and other interested parties.

Each State plan approved by the Director under section 940 shall include assurances that following completion of a participant's course of education each participant shall receive appropriate additional training by the State or local authority to which the participant is assigned. The time spent by a participant in such additional training, but not the time spent in Police Corps training, shall be counted toward fulfillment of the participant's 4-year service obligation.

Subtitle E—Rural Crime Prevention Strategy

SEC. 971. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The traditional supportive roles of the family, church, school, and community have declined in importance as a positive social factor influencing the prevention and control of crime in rural areas. As a result in recent years rural areas have experienced a marked increase in crime rates. This increase is taking its toll on rural law enforcement practitioners who are already encumbered by numerous characteristics that are unique to their rural circumstances.

(2) Compounding the increase in crime rates, rural police unlike their urban counterparts, are likely to encounter a multitude of nontraditional police tasks such as fire and railroad emergencies, search and rescue missions, animal control problems, livestock theft, wildlife enforcement, illegal distilleries, illegal crop farming and drug manufacturing, rural drug trafficking, and toxic dumping.

(3) These problems are further exacerbated by the rural officer's distinct disadvantage with respect to the lack of adequate training to manage these varied assignments, the low degree of specialization of job tasks, unique job stress factors, and inadequate data resources. Inadequate rural crime statistics and data analysis capabilities further frustrate the rural police organization's ability to cope with the nature, extent, and trends of rural crime.

(4) Rural law enforcement agencies are at a critical juncture, and strategic planning and action are imperative. The Domestic Chemical Action Group convened by the National Institute of Justice in October 1990 has recommended that rural police receive training in various safety issues related to the identification, investigation, and seizure of illicit drug and chemical laboratories located in rural areas. Without such specialized training officials will face a high probability of explosions endangering police personnel and the community. National Institute of Justice sponsored research of environmental crime in major urban areas, including Los Angeles, has revealed the lack of police training in the identification, investigation, and clean-up of toxic and hazardous waste areas. It can be said with certainty that this recognized need for hazardous materials training is equally critical for rural police organizations.

SEC. 972. STRATEGY TO ADDRESS RURAL CRIME.

The purpose of this subtitle is to address the growing problems of rural crime in a systematic and effective manner with a program of practical and focused research, development, and dissemination designed to assist States and units of local government in rural areas throughout the country in implementing specific programs and strategies which offer a high probability of improving the functioning of their criminal justice systems.

SEC. 973. NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE NATIONAL ASSESSMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the National Institute of Justice (referred to in this subtitle as the "Director") shall conduct a national assessment of the nature and extent of rural crime in the United States, the needs of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural States and communities, and promising strategies to respond effectively to those challenges, including—

(1) the problem of clandestine drug laboratories; changing patterns in their location and operation; safety and liability issues for both law enforcement officers and the community in the identification, investigation, seizure, and clean-up of clandestine laboratories;

(2) other environmental crimes, such as the dumping of hazardous and toxic wastes; the pollution of streams, rivers, and ground water; and access of rural communities to the expertise necessary to successfully identify, investigate, and prosecute such crimes;

(3) the cultivation of illegal crops, such as marijuana, including changing patterns in location and techniques for identification, investigation, and destruction;

(4) the problems of drug and alcohol abuse in rural communities, including law enforcement and criminal justice response and access to treatment services;

(5) the problems of family violence and child abuse, including law enforcement and criminal justice response and access to services for victims of such crimes;

(6) the problems of juvenile delinquency and vandalism as they affect rural communities;

(7) the access of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural communities to the services of crime laboratories, the Automated Fingerprint Identification System, and other technological support;

(8) the access of law enforcement and criminal justice professionals in rural communities to professional training and development and the identification of models for the delivery of such training; and

(9) the special problems of drug abuse in jurisdictions with populations of 50,000 or less.

(b) FINAL REPORT.—The Director shall submit the national assessment to the President and Congress not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) DISSEMINATION OF REPORT.—Based on the results of the national assessment and analysis of successful and promising strategies in these areas, the Director shall disseminate the results not only through reports, publications, and clearinghouse services, but also through programs of training and technical assistance, designed to address the realities and challenges of rural law enforcement.

SEC. 974. PILOT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director may make grants to local law enforcement agencies for pilot programs and field tests of particularly promising strategies and models, which could then serve as the basis for demonstration and education programs under the Bureau of Justice Assistance Discretionary Grant Program.

(b) TYPES OF PROGRAMS.—Pilot programs funded under this section may include—

(1) programs to develop and demonstrate new or improved approaches or techniques for rural criminal justice systems;

(2) programs of training and technical assistance to meet the needs of rural law enforcement and criminal justice professionals including safety;

(3) a rural initiative to study and improve the response to traffic safety problems and drug interdiction;

(4) an ongoing program to assist law enforcement professionals in dealing with the hazards of clandestine drug laboratories;

(5) victim assistance information to assist departments in beginning and maintaining strong programs to assist victims and witnesses of crime;

(6) emergency preparedness information for community groups concerned about disaster preparedness on the family and community level; and

(7) a program targeted at communities of less than 50,000 stressing the need for production of public safety through extensive partnership efforts between law enforcement, other local government agencies, businesses, schools, community and social organizations, and citizens.

SEC. 975. FUNDING.

There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 to carry out the national assessment and pilot programs required by this subtitle.

Subtitle F—National Commission to Support Law Enforcement

SEC. 981. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "National Commission to Support Law Enforcement Act.".

SEC. 982. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) law enforcement officers risk their lives daily to protect citizens, for modest rewards and too little recognition;

(2) a significant shift has occurred in the problems that law enforcement officers face without a corresponding change in the support from the Federal Government;

(3) law enforcement officers are on the front line in the war against drugs and crime;

(4) the rate of violent crime continues to increase along with the increase in drug use;

(6) the Presidential Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice of 1965 focused attention on many issues affecting law enforcement, and a review 25 years later would help to evaluate current problems, including drug-related crime, violence, racial conflict, and decreased funding; and

(7) a comprehensive study of law enforcement issues, including the role of the Federal Government in supporting law enforcement officers, working conditions, and responsibility for crime control would assist in redefining the relationships between the Federal Government, the public, and law enforcement officials.

There is established a national commission to be known as the "National Commission to Support Law Enforcement" (referred to in this subtitle as the "Commission").

"CHAPTER 228—DEATH SENTENCE

"Sec.

"A defendant who has been found guilty of—

"(1) an offense described in section 794 or section 2381 of this title;

"(2) an offense described in section 1751(c) of this title, if the offense, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at the hearing under section 3593, constitutes an attempt to kill the President of the United States and results in bodily injury to the President or comes dangerously close to causing the death of the President; or

"(3) any other offense for which a sentence of death is provided, if the defendant, as determined beyond a reasonable doubt at the hearing under section 3593—

"(A) intentionally killed the victim;

"(B) intentionally inflicted serious bodily injury that resulted in the death of the victim;

"(C) intentionally participated in an act, contemplating that the life of a person would be taken or intending that lethal force would be used in connection with a person, other than one of the participants in the offense, and the victim died as a direct result of the act; or

"(D) intentionally and specifically engaged in an act, knowing that the act created a grave risk of death to a person, other than one of the participants in the offense, such that participation in the act constituted a reckless disregard for human life and the victim died as a direct result of the act, shall be sentenced to death if, after consideration of the factors set forth in section 3592 in the course of a hearing held pursuant to section 3593, it is determined that imposition of a sentence of death is justified, except that no person may be sentenced to death who was less than 18 years of age at the time of the offense.

"§3592. Mitigating and aggravating factors to be considered in determining whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) MITIGATING FACTORS.—In determining whether a sentence of death is to be imposed on a defendant, the finder of fact shall consider any mitigating factor, including the following:

"(1) IMPAIRED CAPACITY.—The defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of the defendant's conduct or to conform conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, regardless of whether the capacity was so impaired as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(2) DURESS.—The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, regardless of whether the duress was of such a degree as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(3) MINOR PARTICIPATION.—The defendant is punishable as a principal (as defined in section 2 of title 18 of the United States Code) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor, regardless of whether the participation was so minor as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(4) FORSEEABILITY.—The defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that the defendant's conduct in the course of the commission of murder, or other offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted, would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing, death to any person.

"(5) NO PRIOR CRIMINAL RECORD.—The defendant did not have a significant prior history of other criminal conduct.

"(6) DISTURBANCE.—The defendant committed the offense under severe mental or emotional disturbance.

"(7) VICTIM'S CONSENT.—The victim consented to the criminal conduct that resulted in the victim's death.

"(8) OTHER FACTORS.—Other factors in the defendant's background, record, or character or any other circumstance of the offense that mitigate against imposition of the death sentence.

"(b) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR ESPIONAGE AND TREASON.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591(1), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors for which notice has been given and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) PRIOR ESPIONAGE OR TREASON OFFENSE.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another offense involving espionage or treason for which a sentence of either life imprisonment or death was authorized by law.

"(2) GRAVE RISK TO NATIONAL SECURITY.—In the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of substantial danger to the national security.

"(3) GRAVE RISK OF DEATH.—In the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor for which notice has been given exists.

"(c) AGGRAVATING FACTORS FOR HOMICIDE AND FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER OF THE PRESIDENT.—In determining whether a sentence of death is justified for an offense described in section 3591 (2) or (6), the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider each of the following aggravating factors for which notice has been given and determine which, if any, exist:

"(1) DEATH DURING COMMISSION OF ANOTHER CRIME.—The death, or injury resulting in death, occurred during the commission or attempted commission of, or during the immediate flight from the commission of, an offense under section 32 (destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities), section 33 (destruction of motor vehicles or motor vehicle facilities), section 36 (violence at international airports), section 351 (violence against Members of Congress, Cabinet officers, or Supreme Court Justices), an offense under section 751 (prisoners in custody of institution or officer), section 794 (gathering or delivering defense information to aid foreign government), section 844(d) (transportation of explosives in interstate commerce for certain purposes), section 844(f) (destruction of Government property in interstate commerce by explosives), section 1118 (prisoners serving life term), section 1201 (kidnaping), section 844(i) (destruction of property affecting interstate commerce by explosives), section 1116 (killing or attempted killing of diplomats), section 1203 (hostage taking), section 1992 (wrecking trains), section 2280 (maritime violence), section 2281 (maritime platform violence), section 2332 (terrorist acts abroad against United States nationals), section 2339 (use of weapons of mass destruction), or section 2381 (treason) of this title, or section 902 (i) or (n) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1472 (i) or (n)) (aircraft piracy).

"(2) INVOLVEMENT OF FIREARM OR PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF VIOLENT FELONY INVOLVING FIREARM.—For any offense, other than an offense for which a sentence of death is sought on the basis of section 924(c) of this title, as amended by this Act, the defendant—

(A) during and in relation to the commission of the offense or in escaping or attempting to escape apprehension used or possessed a firearm as defined in section 921 of this title; or

(B) has previously been convicted of a Federal or State offense punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, involving the use of attempted or threatened use of a firearm, as defined in section 921 of this title, against another person.

"(3) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OFFENSE FOR WHICH A SENTENCE OF DEATH OR LIFE IMPRISONMENT WAS AUTHORIZED.—The defendant has previously been convicted of another Federal or State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or a sentence of death was authorized by statute.

"(4) PREVIOUS CONVICTION OF OTHER SERIOUS OFFENSES.—The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more Federal or State offenses, punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury or death upon another person.

"(5) GRAVE RISK OF DEATH TO ADDITIONAL PERSONS.—The defendant, in the commission of the offense, or in escaping apprehension for the violation of the offense, knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense.

"(6) HEINOUS, CRUEL, OR DEPRAVED MANNER OF COMMITTING OFFENSE.—The defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner in that it involved torture or serious physical abuse to the victim.

"(7) PROCUREMENT OF OFFENSE BY PAYMENT.—The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(8) PECUNIARY GAIN.—The defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(9) SUBSTANTIAL PLANNING AND PREMEDITATION.—The defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation to cause the death of a person or commit an act of terrorism.

"(10) CONVICTION FOR TWO FELONY DRUG OFFENSES.—The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the distribution of a controlled substance.

"(11) VULNERABILITY OF VICTIM.—The victim was particularly vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity.

"(12) CONVICTION FOR SERIOUS FEDERAL DRUG OFFENSES.—The defendant had previously been convicted of violating title II or title III of the Controlled Substances Act for which a sentence of 5 or more years may be imposed or had previously been convicted of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise.

"(13) CONTINUING CRIMINAL ENTERPRISE INVOLVING DRUG SALES TO MINORS.—The defendant committed the offense in the course of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise in violation of section 408(c) of the Controlled Substances Act and that violation involved the distribution of drugs to persons under the age of 21 in violation of section 418 of such Act.

"(14) HIGH PUBLIC OFFICIALS.—The defendant committed the offense against—

"(A) the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, the Vice-President-elect, the Vice-President-designate, or, if there is no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession to the office of the President of the United States, or any person who is acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States;

"(B) a chief of state, head of government, or the political equivalent, of a foreign nation;

"(C) a foreign official listed in section 1116(b)(3)(A) of this title, if the official is in the United States on official business; or

"(D) a Federal public servant who is a judge, a law enforcement officer, or an employee of a United States penal or correctional institution—

"(i) while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties;

"(ii) because of the performance of his official duties; or

"(iii) because of his status as a public servant.

For purposes of this subparagraph, a 'law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a Government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution or adjudication of an offense, and includes those engaged in corrections, parole, or probation functions.

The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, may consider whether any other aggravating factor for which notice has been given exists.

"§3593. Special hearing to determine whether a sentence of death is justified

"(a) NOTICE BY THE GOVERNMENT.—If, in a case involving an offense described in section 3591, the attorney for the government believes that the circumstances of the offense are such that a sentence of death is justified under this chapter, the attorney shall, a reasonable time before the trial or before acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, sign and file with the court, and serve on the defendant, a notice—

"(1) stating that the government believes that the circumstances of the offense are such that, if the defendant is convicted, a sentence of death is justified under this chapter and that the government will seek the sentence of death; and

"(2) setting forth the aggravating factor or factors that the government, if the defendant is convicted, proposes to prove as justifying a sentence of death.

The factors for which notice is provided under this subsection may include factors concerning the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family, and may include oral testimony, a victim impact statement that identifies the victim of the offense and the extent and scope of the injury and loss suffered by the victim and the victim's family, and any other relevant information. The court may permit the attorney for the government to amend the notice upon a showing of good cause.

"(b) HEARING BEFORE A COURT OR JURY.—If the attorney for the government has filed a notice as required under subsection (a) and the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense described in section 3591, the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or another judge if that judge is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(1) before the jury that determined the defendant's guilt;

"(2) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(A) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(B) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(C) the jury that determined the defendant's guilt was discharged for good cause; or

"(D) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, reconsideration of the sentence under this section is necessary; or

"(3) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the attorney for the government.

A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (2) shall consist of twelve members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate, with the approval of the court, that it shall consist of a lesser number.

"(c) PROOF OF MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING FACTORS.—Notwithstanding rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, when a defendant is found guilty or pleads guilty to an offense under section 3591, no presentence report shall be prepared. At the sentencing hearing, information may be presented as to any matter relevant to the sentence, including any mitigating or aggravating factor permitted or required to be considered under section 3592. Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits if the hearing is held before a jury or judge not present during the trial. The defendant may present any information relevant to a mitigating factor. The government may present any information relevant to an aggravating factor. The government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any aggravating or mitigating factor, and as to the appropriateness in the case of imposing a sentence of death. The government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of any aggravating factor is on the government, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless the existence of such a factor is established by a preponderance of the information.

"(d) RETURN OF SPECIAL FINDINGS.—The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factor or factors set forth in section 3592 found to exist and any other aggravating factor for which notice has been provided under subsection (a) found to exist. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more members of the jury, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such factor established for purposes of this section regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established. A finding with respect to any aggravating factor must be unanimous. If no aggravating factor set forth in section 3592 is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence other than death authorized by law.

"(e) RETURN OF A FINDING CONCERNING A SENTENCE OF DEATH.—If, in the case of—

"(1) an offense described in section 3591(1), an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592(b) is found to exist; or the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider whether all the aggravating factor or factors found to exist sufficiently outweigh all the mitigating factor or factors found to exist to justify a sentence of death, or, in the absence of a mitigating factor, whether the aggravating factor or factors alone are sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based upon this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall recommend whether a sentence of death shall be imposed rather than a lesser sentence. The jury or the court, if there is no jury, regardless of its findings with respect to aggravating and mitigating factors, is never required to impose a death sentence.

"(f) SPECIAL PRECAUTION TO ENSURE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.—In a hearing held before a jury, the court, prior to the return of a finding under subsection (e), shall instruct the jury that, in considering whether a sentence of death is justified, it shall not consider the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or of any victim may be. The jury, upon return of a finding under subsection (e), shall also return to the court a certificate, signed by each juror, that consideration of the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim was not involved in reaching his or her individual decision and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regarding a sentence for the crime in question no matter what the race, color, religious beliefs, national origin, or sex of the defendant or any victim may be.

"§3594. Imposition of a sentence of death

"Upon a finding under section 3593(e) that a sentence of death is justified, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise, the court shall impose any sentence other than death that is authorized by law. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the maximum term of imprisonment for the offense is life imprisonment, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without parole.

"§3595. Review of a sentence of death

"(a) APPEAL.—In a case in which a sentence of death is imposed, the sentence shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal must be filed within the time specified for the filing of a notice of appeal. An appeal under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction and shall have priority over all other cases.

"(b) REVIEW.—The court of appeals shall review the entire record in the case, including—

"(1) the evidence submitted during the trial;

"(2) the information submitted during the sentencing hearing;

"(3) the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing; and

"(c) DECISION AND DISPOSITION.—

"(1) The court of appeals shall address all substantive and procedural issues raised on the appeal of a sentence of death, and shall consider whether the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor and whether the evidence supports the special finding of the existence of an aggravating factor required to be considered under section 3592.

"(2) Whenever the court of appeals finds that—

"(A) the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor;

"(B) the admissible evidence and information adduced does not support the special finding of the existence of the required aggravating factor; or

"(C) the proceedings involved any other legal error requiring reversal of the sentence that was properly preserved for appeal under the rules of criminal procedure, the court shall remand the case for reconsideration under section 3593 or imposition of a sentence other than death.

"(3) The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of an appeal of a sentence of death under this section.

"§3596. Implementation of a sentence of death

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A person who has been sentenced to death pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General until exhaustion of the procedures for appeal of the judgment of conviction and for review of the sentence. When the sentence is to be implemented, the Attorney General shall release the person sentenced to death to the custody of a United States marshal, who shall supervise implementation of the sentence in the manner prescribed by the law of the State in which the sentence is imposed. If the law of such State does not provide for implementation of a sentence of death, the court shall designate another State, the law of which does provide for the implementation of a sentence of death, and the sentence shall be implemented in the latter State in the manner prescribed by such law.

"(b) PREGNANT WOMAN.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a woman while she is pregnant.

"(c) MENTAL CAPACITY.—A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who is mentally retarded. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who, as a result of mental disability, lacks the mental capacity to understand the death penalty and why it was imposed on that person.

"§3597. Use of State facilities

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A United States marshal charged with supervising the implementation of a sentence of death may use appropriate State or local facilities for the purpose, may use the services of an appropriate State or local official or of a person such an official employs for the purpose, and shall pay the costs thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General.

"(b) EXCUSE OF AN EMPLOYEE ON MORAL OR RELIGIOUS GROUNDS.—No employee of any State department of corrections, the United States Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Prisons, or the United States Marshals Service, and no employee providing services to that department, bureau, or service under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment or contractual obligation, to be in attendance at or to participate in any prosecution or execution under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participation in executions' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for execution and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.

"§3598. Special provisions for Indian country.

"Notwithstanding sections 1152 and 1153, no person subject to the criminal jurisdiction of an Indian tribal government shall be subject to a capital sentence under this chapter for any offense the Federal jurisdiction for which is predicated solely on Indian country as defined in section 1151 of this title, and which has occurred within the boundaries of such Indian country, unless the governing body of the tribe has elected that this chapter have effect over land and persons subject to its criminal jurisdiction.".

(D) be of good character and demonstrate sincere motivation and dedication to law enforcement and public service;

(ii) Clause (i) shall not be construed to preclude counting a participant's previous period of law enforcement experience for purposes other than satisfaction of the requirements of section 1235, such as for purposes of determining such a participant's pay and other benefits, rank, and tenure.

(3) It is the intent of this Act that there shall be no more than 20,000 participants in each graduating class. The Director shall approve State plans providing in the aggregate for such enrollment of applicants as shall assure, as nearly as possible, annual graduating classes of 20,000. In a year in which applications are received in a number greater than that which will produce, in the judgment of the Director, a graduating class of more than 20,000, the Director shall, in deciding which applications to grant, give preference to those who will be participating in State plans that provide law enforcement personnel to areas of greatest need.

(c) RECRUITMENT OF MINORITIES.—Each State participating in the Police Corps program shall make special efforts to seek and recruit applicants from among members of all racial, ethnic or gender groups. This subsection does not authorize an exception from the competitive standards for admission established pursuant to subsections (a) and (b).

(2) A participant who requests a leave of absence from educational study, training or service for a period not to exceed 1 year (or 18 months in the aggregate in the event of multiple requests) for any reason other than those listed in paragraph (1) may be granted such leave of absence by the State.

SEC. 1234. POLICE CORPS TRAINING.

Such programs may be carried out at up to 3 training centers established for this purpose and administered by the Director, or by contracting with existing State training facilities. The Director shall contract with a State training facility upon request of such facility if the Director determines that such facility offers a course of training substantially equivalent to the Police Corps training program described in this subtitle.

(2) The Director is authorized to enter into contracts with individuals, institutions of learning, and government agencies (including State and local police forces), to obtain the services of persons qualified to participate in and contribute to the training process.

(3) The Director is authorized to enter into agreements with agencies of the Federal Government to utilize on a reimbursable basis space in Federal buildings and other resources.

(4) The Director may authorize such expenditures as are necessary for the effective maintenance of the training centers, including purchases of supplies, uniforms, and educational materials, and the provision of subsistence, quarters, and medical care to participants.

(b) TRAINING SESSIONS.—A participant in a State Police Corps program shall attend two 8-week training sessions at a training center, one during the summer following completion of sophomore year and one during the summer following completion of junior year. If a participant enters the program after sophomore year, the participant shall complete 16 weeks of training at times determined by the Director.

(c) FURTHER TRAINING.—The 16 weeks of Police Corps training authorized in this section is intended to serve as basic law enforcement training but not to exclude further training of participants by the State and local authorities to which they will be assigned. Each State plan approved by the Director under section 1236 shall include assurances that following completion of a participant's course of education each participant shall receive appropriate additional training by the State or local authority to which the participant is assigned. The time spent by a participant in such additional training, but not the time spent in Police Corps training, shall be counted toward fulfillment of the participant's 4-year service obligation.

(d) COURSE OF TRAINING.—The training sessions at training centers established under this section shall be designed to provide basic law enforcement training, including vigorous physical and mental training to teach participants self-discipline and organizational loyalty and to impart knowledge and understanding of legal processes and law enforcement.

(b) RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.—A participant shall have all of the rights and responsibilities of and shall be subject to all rules and regulations applicable to other members of the police force of which the participant is a member, including those contained in applicable agreements with labor organizations and those provided by State and local law.

(c) DISCIPLINE.—If the police force of which the participant is a member subjects the participant to discipline such as would preclude the participant's completing 4 years of service, and result in denial of educational assistance under section 1232, the Director may, upon a showing of good cause, permit the participant to complete the service obligation in an equivalent alternative law enforcement service and, if such service is satisfactorily completed, section 1232(d)(1)(C) shall not apply.

(d) LAY-OFFS.—If the police force of which the participant is a member lays off the participant such as would preclude the participant's completing 4 years of service, and result in denial of educational assistance under section 1232, the Director may permit the participant to complete the service obligation in an equivalent alternative law enforcement service and, if such service is satisfactorily completed, section 1232(d)(1)(C) shall not apply.

SEC. 1236. STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

(A) prior to commencement of a participant's fourth year of undergraduate study, under such circumstances as the plan may specify; and

(B) from commencement of a participant's fourth year of undergraduate study until completion of 4 years of police service by participant, only for compelling reasons or to meet the needs of the State Police Corps program and only with the consent of the participant;

(6) provide that no participant shall be assigned to serve with a local police force—

(A) whose size has declined by more than 5 percent since June 21, 1989; or

(B) which has members who have been laid off but not retired;

(7) provide that participants shall be placed and to the extent feasible kept on community and preventive patrol;

(8) assure that participants will receive effective training and leadership;

(9) provide that the State may decline to offer a participant an appointment following completion of Federal training, or may remove a participant from the Police Corps program at any time, only for good cause (including failure to make satisfactory progress in a course of educational study) and after following reasonable review procedures stated in the plan; and

(10) provide that a participant shall, while serving as a member of a police force, be compensated at the same rate of pay and benefits and enjoy the same rights under applicable agreements with labor organizations and under State and local law as other police officers of the same rank and tenure in the police force of which the participant is a member.

SEC. 1404. DRUG TREATMENT IN FEDERAL PRISONS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Drug Treatment in Federal Prisons Act of 1991".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—

As used in this section—

(1) the term "residential substance abuse treatment" means a course of individual and group activities, lasting between 9 and 12 months, in residential treatment facilities set apart from the general prison population—

(A) directed at the substance abuse problems of the prisoner; and

(B) intended to develop the prisoner's cognitive, behavioral, social, vocational, and other skills so as to solve the prisoner's substance abuse and related problems; and

(2) the term "eligible prisoner" means a prisoner who is—

(A) determined by the Bureau of Prisons to have a substance abuse problem; and

(B) willing to participate in a residential substance abuse treatment program.

(c) IMPLEMENTATION OF SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT REQUIREMENT.—

(1) In order to carry out the requirement of the last sentence of section 3621(b) of title 18, United States Code, that every prisoner with a substance abuse problem have the opportunity to participate in appropriate substance abuse treatment, the Bureau of Prisons shall provide residential substance abuse treatment—

(A) for not less than 50 percent of eligible prisoners by the end of fiscal year 1993;

(B) for not less than 75 percent of eligible prisoners by the end of fiscal year 1994; and

(C) for all eligible prisoners by the end of fiscal year 1995 and thereafter.

(2) Section 3621 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) INCENTIVE FOR PRISONERS' SUCCESSFUL COMPLETION OF TREATMENT PROGRAM.—

"(1) GENERALLY.—Any prisoner who, in the judgment of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, has successfully completed a program of residential substance abuse treatment provided under subsection (b) of this section, shall remain in the custody of the Bureau for such time (as limited by paragraph (2) of this subsection) and under such conditions, as the Bureau deems appropriate. If the conditions of confinement are different from those the prisoner would have experienced absent the successful completion of the treatment, the Bureau shall periodically test the prisoner for drug abuse and discontinue such conditions on determining that drug abuse has recurred.

"(2) PERIOD OF CUSTODY.—The period the prisoner remains in custody after successfully completing a treatment program shall not exceed the prison term the law would otherwise require such prisoner to serve, but may not be less than such term minus one year.".

(d) REPORT.—The Bureau of Prisons shall transmit to the Congress on January 1, 1993, and on January 1 of each year thereafter, a report. Such report shall contain—

(1) a detailed quantitative and qualitative description of each substance abuse treatment program, residential or not, operated by the Bureau;

(2) a full explanation of how eligibility for such programs is determined, with complete information on what proportion of prisoners with substance abuse problems are eligible; and

(3) a complete statement of to what extent the Bureau has achieved compliance with the requirements of this title.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1991 and each fiscal year thereafter such sums as may be necessary to carry out this title.

SEC. 1405. PRISON FOR VIOLENT DRUG OFFENDERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The total population of Federal, State, and local prisons and jails increased by 84 percent between 1980 and 1988 and currently numbers more than 900,000 people.

(2) More than 60 percent of all prisoners have a history of drug abuse or are regularly using drugs while in prison, but only 11 percent of State prison inmates and 7 percent of Federal prisoners are enrolled in drug treatment programs. Hundreds of thousands of prisoners are not receiving needed drug treatment while incarcerated, and the number of such persons is increasing rapidly.

(3) Drug-abusing prisoners are highly likely to return to crime upon release, but the recidivism rate is much lower for those who successfully complete treatment programs. Providing drug treatment to prisoners during incarceration therefore provides an opportunity to break the cycle of recidivism, reducing the crime rate and future prison overcrowding.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1992, the following amounts:

(1) $600,000,000 for the construction of 10 regional prisons; and

Such amounts shall be in addition to any other amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Bureau of Prisons.

(c) LOCATION AND POPULATION.—The regional prisons authorized by this section shall be located in places chosen by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, after consulting with the Director of National Drug Control Policy, not less than 6 months after the effective date of this section. Each such facility shall be used to accommodate a population consisting of State and Federal prisoners in proportions of 20 percent Federal and 80 percent State.

(d) ELIGIBILITY OF PRISONERS.—The regional prisons authorized by this section shall be used to incarcerate State and Federal prisoners who have release dates of not more than 2 years from the date of assignment to the prison and who have been found to have substance abuse problems requiring long-term treatment.

(e) STATE RESPONSIBILITIES.—(1) The States shall select prisoners for assignment to the regional prisons who, in addition to satisfying eligibility criteria otherwise specified in this section, have long-term drug abuse problems and serious criminal histories. Selection of such persons is necessary for the regional prison program to have the maximum impact on the crime rate and future prison overcrowding, since such persons are the ones most likely to commit new crimes following release. Prisoners selected for assignment to a regional prison must agree to the assignment.

(2) Any State seeking to refer a State prisoner to a regional prison shall submit to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons (referred to as the "Director") an aftercare plan setting forth the provisions that the State will make for the continued treatment of the prisoner in a therapeutic community following release. The aftercare plan shall also contain provisions for vocational job training where appropriate.

(3) The State referring the prisoner to the regional prison (referred to as the "sending State") shall reimburse the Bureau of Prisons for the full cost of the incarceration and treatment of the prisoner, except that if the prisoner successfully completes the treatment program, the Director shall return to the sending State 25 percent of the amount paid for that prisoner. The total amount returned to each State under this paragraph in each fiscal year shall be used by that State to provide the aftercare treatment required by paragraph (2).

(f) POWERS OF THE DIRECTOR.—(1) The Director shall have the exclusive right to determine whether or not a State or Federal prisoner satisfies the eligibility requirements of this section, and whether the prisoner is to be accepted into the regional prison program. The Director shall have the right to make this determination after the staff of the regional prison has had an opportunity to interview the prisoner in person.

(2) The Director shall have the exclusive right to determine if a prisoner in the regional treatment program is complying with all of the conditions and requirements of the program. The Director shall have the authority to return any prisoner not complying with the conditions and requirements of the program to the sending State at any time. The Director shall notify the sending State whenever such prisoner is returned that the prisoner has not successfully completed the treatment program.

SEC. 1406. BOOT CAMPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall establish within the Bureau of Prisons 10 military-style boot camp prisons (referred to in this section as "boot camps"). The boot camps will be located on closed military installations on sites to be chosen by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, after consultation with the Director of National Drug Control Policy, and will provide a highly regimented schedule of strict discipline, physical training, work, drill, and ceremony characteristic of military basic training as well as remedial education and treatment for substance abuse.

(b) CAPACITY.—Each boot camp shall be designed to accommodate between 200 and 300 inmates for periods of not less than 90 days and not greater than 120 days. Not more than 20 percent of the inmates shall be Federal prisoners. The remaining inmates shall be State prisoners who are accepted for participation in the boot camp program pursuant to subsection (d).

(c) FEDERAL PRISONERS.—Section 3582 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) BOOT CAMP PRISON AS A SENTENCING ALTERNATIVE.—(1) The court, in imposing sentence in the circumstances described in paragraph (2), may designate the defendant as eligible for placement in a boot camp prison. The Bureau of Prisons shall determine whether a defendant so designated will be assigned to a boot camp prison.

"(2) A defendant may be designated as eligible for placement in boot camp prison if—

"(A) the defendant—

"(i) is under 25 years of age;

"(ii) has no prior conviction for which he or she has served more than 10 days incarceration; and

"(iii) has been convicted of an offense involving a controlled substance punishable under the Controlled Substances Act or the Controlled Substances Export and Import Act, or any other offense if the defendant, at the time of arrest or at any time thereafter, tested positive for the presence of a controlled substance in his or her blood or urine; and

"(B) the sentencing court finds that the defendant's total offense level under the Federal sentencing guidelines is level 15 or less.

"(3) If the Director of the Bureau of Prisons finds that an inmate placed in a boot camp prison pursuant to this subsection has willfully refused to comply with the conditions of confinement in the boot camp, the Director may transfer the inmate to any other correctional facility in the Federal prison system.

"(4) Successful completion of assignment to a boot camp shall constitute satisfaction of any period of active incarceration, but shall not affect any aspect of a sentence relating to a fine, restitution, or supervised release.".

(d) STATE PRISONERS.—(1) The head of a State corrections department or the head's designee may apply for boot camp placement for any person who has been convicted of a criminal offense in that State, or who anticipates entering a plea of guilty of such offense, but who has not yet been sentenced. Such application shall be made to the Bureau of Prisons and shall be in the form designated by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons and shall contain a statement certified by the head of the State corrections department or the head's designee that at the time of sentencing the applicant is likely to be eligible for assignment to a boot camp pursuant to paragraph (2). The Bureau of Prisons shall respond to such applications within 30 days so that the sentencing court is aware of the result of the application at the time of sentencing. In responding to such applications, the Bureau of Prisons shall determine, on the basis of the availability of space, whether a defendant who becomes eligible for assignment to a boot camp prison at the time of sentencing will be so assigned.

(2) A person convicted of a State criminal offense shall be eligible for assignment to a boot camp if he or she—

(A) is under 25 years of age;

(B) has no prior conviction for which he or she has served more than 10 days incarceration;

(C) has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment that will be satisfied under the law of the sentencing State if the defendant successfully completes a term of not less than 90 days nor more than 120 days in a boot camp;

(D) has been designated by the sentencing court as eligible for assignment to a boot camp; and

(E) has been convicted of an offense involving a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)), or any other offense if the defendant is eligible for assignment to a boot camp under State law.

(3) If the Director of the Bureau of Prisons finds that an inmate placed in a boot camp prison pursuant to this subsection has willfully refused to comply with the conditions of confinement in the boot camp, the Director may transfer the inmate back to the jurisdiction of the State sentencing court.

(4) Any State referring a prisoner to a boot camp shall reimburse the Bureau of Prisons for the full cost of the incarceration of the prisoner, except that if the prisoner successfully completes the boot camp program, the Bureau of Prisons shall return to the State 20 percent of the amount paid for that prisoner. The total amount returned to each State under this paragraph in each fiscal year shall be used by that State to provide the aftercare supervision and services required by paragraph (e).

(e) POST-RELEASE SUPERVISION.—(1) Any State seeking to refer a State prisoner to a boot camp prison shall submit to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons an aftercare plan setting forth the provisions that the State will make for the continued supervision of the prisoner following release. The aftercare plan shall also contain provisions for educational and vocational training and drug or other counseling and treatment where appropriate.

(2) The Bureau of Prisons shall develop an aftercare plan setting forth the provisions that will be made for the continued supervision of Federal prisoners following release. The aftercare plan shall also contain provisions for educational and vocational training and drug or other counseling and treatment where appropriate.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $150,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, available until expended, of which not more than $12,500,000 shall be used to convert each closed military base to a boot camp prison and not more than $2,500,000 shall be used to operate each boot camp for one fiscal year. Such amounts shall be in addition to any other amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Bureau of Prisons.

consider applications from governments of less populated areas where the magnitude and severity of such activities is beyond the capability of the State or local government to respond.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 55 (relating to kidnapping) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§1204. International parental kidnapping

''(a) Whoever removes a child from the United States or retains a child (who has been in the United States) outside the United States with intent to obstruct the lawful exercise of parental rights shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

''(b) As used in this section—

''(1) the term 'child' means a person who has not attained the age of 16 years; and

''(2) the term 'parental rights', with respect to a child, means the right to physical custody of the child—

''(A) whether joint or sole (and includes visiting rights); and

''(B) whether arising by operation of law, court order, or legally binding agreement of the parties.

''(c) It shall be an affirmative defense under this section that—

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL TEACHER APPRECIATION WEEK

• Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize National Teacher Appreciation Week. During this week, May 3 through 9, students, parents, and communities across the country will be taking the opportunity to acknowledge the dedication and commitment of our country's teachers to this most noble of professions.

Being a good teacher requires one to possess a multitude of attributes—among them an infinite degree of patience and perseverance. As a teacher, one is not merely expected to impart facts and figures to youngsters. Especially in these very troubled times, the critical responsibilities of a teacher include providing insight, much-needed counsel, and all too often, solace.

For those faced with classes of 20-plus students and course loads well beyond that in which one has been versed, it can sometimes be an almost impossible task to call up the reserves of energy, find the 25th hour in the day, and summon the inner wisdom to do what must be done.

Yet, the vast majority of teachers in our public school system do just that and more. They make that time, and they extend that effort. They are available to their students before and after school. They give up their own extracurricular activities to volunteer to help out with those of their charges. They spend their own money when proper resources are lacking—or when they just feel that it is needed to do a better job.

Mr. President, today we have the opportunity to honor these keystones of our society. They toil day after day to ensure the very future of the United States—a truth that too many fail to realize in their blind criticism and lack of support. The awesome duty of seeing that our leaders and citizens of tomorrow are fully prepared, in both their minds and hearts, is one that we have all placed on our Nation's teachers.

Today, I am here to applaud each and every one of them, especially those in my home State of Hawaii, for their unselfish, unparalleled devotion to the most honored of professions. I ask my colleagues to join me in paying our highest tribute to the efforts of our Nation's teachers during National Teacher Appreciation Week.•

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS BRANCH 425

• Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the National Association of Letter Carriers Branch 425. On May 13, the NALC Branch 425 will be presented the National Association of Letter Carriers' Branch Service Award in recognition of its outstanding community services.

The men and women of NALC Branch 425 are well deserving of this honor. Despite long hours at work, NALC Branch 425 has consistently devoted considerable effort to meet the needs of the less fortunate individuals and families of the Hackensack community.

Branch 425 is dedicated to aiding those who need clothes and food. Using different community resources to collect and distribute these items, they were successful in providing community wide access to individuals and families in need. For example, the men and women of branch 425 collected food for a local church's area food bank and distributed supermarket vouchers.

In addition, the letter carriers have recognized the need for AIDS research and have been supportive in this cause. They are committed to women's rights and are working on establishing a women's forum for women to discuss their problems within community.

During the Persian Gulf war, the letter carriers of branch 425 took over the Marines' shorthanded Toys for Tots Program, assuring holiday toys for the needy children of Hackensack. In addition, they collected toys for distribution by the Salvation Army, a local YMCA day care center for lower income children and to individual needy postal patrons.

Mr. President, the National Association of Letter Carriers Branch 425 has committed much of their time and effort to the betterment of the Hackensack community and to providing the less fortunate with food, clothes, and toys. I commend the men and women of branch 425 for their outstanding contributions to their community.•

VETERANS' COMMITTEE HEARING ON HOMELESS VETERANS

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee held a hearing on homeless veterans on April 9, 1992. I was proud to have the opportunity to cochair part of this hearing, and gather testimony from formerly homeless veterans. These men had compelling stories to tell, and I wanted to take this opportunity to share their testimony with my colleagues.

It is a tragedy that so many men and women who bravely served our country in the Armed Forces are homeless—between 200,000 and 330,000 veterans are homeless. An evaluation of one of the VA's residential treatment programs a few years ago revealed that demand for treatment exceeded availability at every one of the 45 program sites.

The VA and other Federal organizations have programs for homeless veterans, but the needs are overwhelming. We must find better ways to coordinate Federal resources and reach out to homeless veterans. During the hearing, we gathered testimony on Senator CRANSTON's bill, S. 2512, that will continue and expand the successful Homeless Veterans Reintegration Program, and modify the VA Acquired Properties Program to make it easier for nonprofits and veterans' service organizations to obtain VA property and convert it into transitional housing for homeless veterans. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation.

At the hearing, leaders from veterans' service organizations testified about private efforts to help the homeless, and some projects were exceptional and deserve our support and admiration. But the most important words at the hearing came from the veterans themselves who had been homeless and are struggling to rebuild their lives with assistance from Federal programs. These men are finally getting the help they deserve, but countless others remain on the streets, unaware of assistance programs or unable to access help.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I believe that our country owes tremendous gratitude to the men and women who have served in our Armed Forces. It is tragic that over a quarter of a million veterans may be homeless. We need to find ways to reach out to them and offer our support, health care, and opportunities they need to get back on their feet.

It took a great deal of courage for these veterans to testify before the committee. But thanks to them, we have new insights into the needs and concerns of homeless veterans.

Mr. President, I ask that the following statements be printed in the RECORD at this time:

STATEMENT OF STANLEY JORDAN

None of us sets out to be homeless. I don't think no vet wants to be in the predicament that I was put in. I didn't ask to be homeless, it was an unfortunate incident that I thought I was being a good citizen. I came to the aid of a person that was murdered here in the city where I was born and raised and paid taxes, went and served my country and I was diagnosed with Delayed Stress Syndrome. I worked here in this very same building. I had a home, had a family that I was taking care of.

This one particular night, that was the beginning of my fall into this black hole of homelessness. I figured that by me being a good citizen, had served on juries, foreman of two juries, that somebody would come to my aid or would understand what I was dealing with. I had no idea what I was dealing with my own self, this Delayed Stress Syndrome. I had carried it around in me for twenty years. This one particular incident set it off.

Everywhere I turned, there was no help. The District Government, I'm sorry but—our Police Chief gets on and says, well, come forward and be a good citizen, and I did this, served the country, I did my time in Vietnam, but when it came time for me to get help, there was no help.

I remember when I was inducted into the military, within eight hours, I was tested mentally, physically, head to toe examination, on a bus from Washington, D.C. to Fort Bragg, North Carolina in eight hours. I was in the military from a civilian to a soldier in eight hours. I expected this same kind of expediency when I went to VA, but it was the total opposite. It was ridiculously slow service and not knowing, nobody would seem to know what your needs were. It was just like, well, you wait.

Fortunately, by me being persistent, I continued to march, I kept on, I persisted, and now I'm currently no longer homeless, but I'm still living below the poverty level, I'm still unemployed. I worked in this very building. These very chairs and tables you're sitting in, apparently I carried them into this room.

Once this disease or illness—it was like another stigma or door shut—came back and I wanted to return to work. I don't want handouts. All my life I've earned what I had or accumulated and I watched my accumulation, my life-long work and struggles disintegrate. I wanted somebody to help me to hold my life together, my sanity together.

Nobody told me that I would be affected the way I was from my career in the military or in Vietnam. We are all sitting here today with bills in front of us and there are thousands and thousands of other veterans that are in more precarious situations than I am. They don't know what the hell is going on. These people that sleep on grates, push carts, sleep under bridges, in cars, the guy that has a crack habit, alcohol problem, mental, somebody has to reach these people.

I was the fortunate one. I had a very nice man from the VA by the name of Mr. Jim Fisher. He took an interest and in this way he showed me what was available to me but for years and years, nothing was available to me—no plan or Stanley, you need this and this is available for you, no housing or so forth. It's no map for veterans. All of us have our own unique problems and we can all talk in a broad sense, but something has to be done in some kind of way to reach each individual.

All of us can't be saved but the ones that want to be saved, the ones that want to work, who want a home, I think regardless of what it costs. Everybody says it's a recession, the [Department of Defense] wants to close military bases. Take these veterans and let these veterans rehabilitate these military bases or installations. They say teachers are out of work, doctors are out of work, put these people there. Teach the veterans. Everybody is into the recycling thing, plastic, glass and newspaper. What about the human? Are we expendable? Throw us away? There's still a lot of good left in us. I just wanted people to recognize that we can be recyclable, too. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM SHERMAN

I'm thankful for this program which I didn't know existed. I was homeless. I'm recovering from being homeless, a substance abuser. I stayed in a shelter for six months and the VA paid for that. If it wasn't for that, I don't know where I'd be.

I have an appointment next month on the 20th for vocational rehabilitation and like I said, I didn't know a program like this existed. It's nice to know that a program like this exists. It makes it worthwhile being a veteran* * *.

I'm just grateful that I have a chance now to start my life over and be productive to society and to myself as a veteran. I'm looking forward to this vocational rehabilitation and maybe possibly get on my feet one day and some young guy might ask me about the military and I can tell him, man, it's a nice try to go in there and you come out and you can have some benefits. Like I said, I have benefits I don't even know about. I'm glad I have this one. It's given me another chance to start my life over again. It makes it worthwhile to be a veteran of the United States.

STATEMENT OF MR. RAYMOND TRACEY

When I came to Project PLASE with Mary, I had two what I call tragedies. I'd just lost my wife last year of nineteen years and had to deal with that, and helped me get through that. And I was chemically addicted. I didn't go to Vietnam, but I was in the Vietnam era through 1966 to 1968 and I was stationed out in California during the time of the hippie generation of sex, drugs, and rock and roll. So I've been addicted for quite a while. I kind of killed the marriage.

A week before my wife passed, I called Fort Howard to see what I could do to stop using the chemicals I was using, and through Fort Howard I found out a lot about the VA that I didn't know about, a lot things that they offered.

After my wife passed [away] and I started to get myself together. During my addiction time, I had killed a lot of places where I could stay, so I was basically homeless. I went to another house called Fayette House which they offer bed and rooms to veterans but the house there, our personalities clashed, but I had to back to 1C to help deal with my wife's issue.

After I left there I was taken to Project PLASE, and there I've been receiving open arms, the helpful hand that a fellow would need if he's homeless and in need of just support to help him back in his life. I just got there. I've only been there about three weeks, but they have been encouraging me to keep up with the federal building aftercare program, the 12-step program, and they have really been helpful.

I think there are some other vets that I do know that's out there in the street that really don't know the advantages that they have now or what may come out of this committee. Hopefully, there will be more, but right now I have a brighter future than I had, say, a month ago.•

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 110—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

• Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I rise today in appreciation for the support of two more of our colleagues who support Senate Concurrent Resolution 110, my legislation to allow the private sector to honor the great patriot Thomas Paine at the intersection of Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] be added as cosponsors to Senate Concurrent Resolution 110.

It is an honor to add my friends from New Jersey and Massachusetts to the 71 original cosponsors, bringing the total to 73 cosponsors.•

CASA

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today I rise to speak in support of CASA, Court Appointed Special Advocates for Children. These trained community volunteers are appointed by a judge to speak for the best interests of abused, neglected, and dependent children in court.

Tragically, each year there is a growing number of children displaced from their homes who are trapped within the system. In order to enhance family preservation efforts and fully protect children, it is crucial to fully examine each case to determine what is best for the child. At a time when the average caseworker has 40 to 60 cases concurrently, it is difficult to give each individual child special consideration. This is where the CASA volunteers play a very significant role. They only work with one or two children at a time so that they can concentrate on the best interests of that child and serve as a special advocate as the judge decides the future of the child.

The CASA Program was created in 1977 by Judge David W. Soukup during his tenure as a superior court judge in the State of Washington. He saw the need for a children's advocate who could devote the time necessary to investigate and make an independent recommendation to the judge on the well-being of the child. Thus, CASA was created with the commitment that "every child has the right to a safe, permanent home." Since its founding, CASA has built a membership of over 19,000 volunteers, affecting the lives of thousands of children in need and struggling in the court system.

As Chairman of the National Commission on Children, I had the opportunity to observe court proceedings in Los Angeles where I was witness to judges having 5 to 10 minutes to decide whether a child was better off remaining in a distressed family, or being placed in foster care. It's a traumatic experience, but it emphasizes the necessity of such an organization as CASA.

The National Commission on Children is committed to promoting the well-being of children and the best way to do so is to support families. Our child protection system must be strengthened dramatically, with greater emphasis on prevention and family preservation. But for those children at risk, we need an efficient court system and a compassionate network for foster care.

Mr. President, I am proud to say that West Virginia has recently become the 48th State to participate in this wonderful program. Last fall, Judge L.D. Egnor appointed the first West Virginia volunteers in Cabell County after the intensive 6-week, 40-hour training period. These first 8 volunteers are currently involved in 12 child abuse cases, and extensive screening for 10 new volunteers is now being conducted. The project is presently coordinated by Laurie McKeown, of the Cabell County Child Protection Team, who has set a good example for future CASA's in West Virginia. She has found the CASA volunteers to be very successful in filling the gaps in our established legal system concerning children.

West Virginia has joined the total of 49 States in attempting to reach the CASA goal: by the year 2000, having a CASA volunteer available for every child needing one. Now, only about a quarter of children are served. I applaud the CASA volunteers and the program for providing compassionate support for children facing intimidating circumstances. The help of a CASA volunteer is invaluable to judges, caseworkers, and others struggling to meet the needs of children at risk. But most important, a CASA volunteer serves as the advocate for the child. CASA deserves our deep admiration and support.•

STUDENTS AT YSLETA HIGH SCHOOL, EL PASO, TX

• Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we spend a lot of time down here on the floor talking about education. We ask ourselves over and over what in the world is wrong with our schools. We worry that we're not paying our teachers well enough, and wring our hands wondering where our kids have gone so wrong.

Frankly, Mr. President, while I will acknowledge that we certainly have some problems we need to resolve, I'm not quite as pessimistic about the education of our children and the kind of job our teachers are doing as some of us are. I think it's important to remember that many of our children are succeeding marvelously. Resourceful and innovative students working together with dedicated and innovative educators can accomplish some wonderful things.

With that in mind, I would like to call to your attention the accomplishments of five students at Ysleta High School in New Mexico's close neighbor to the south, El Paso, TX. This school is situated only 3 miles from the Mexican border. More than 68 percent of the school's 2,500 students live at or below the poverty line. Many could not speak English when they started school.

Some would call this combination a recipe for certain failure. However, don't tell that to Robert Parks, the principal of Ysleta. Five seniors at his school have recently been accepted to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. These five students—Enrique E. Arzaga, Alicia Ayala, Jesus A. Martinez, Liliana Ramirez, and David Villarreal—are believed to constitute the single largest group of students ever admitted to MIT from a general public high school.

I share Principal Parks' pride in the accomplishments of Enrique, Alicia, Jesus, Liliana, and David. I know the students, teachers, and faculty at Ysleta are very proud of these five special students. They have a right to be. Having one student from a school accepted at MIT, one of our country's most prestigious institutions, is a noteworthy accomplishment in itself; but five students from a single school is unprecedented.

Even without this honor, Ysleta's academic achievements would be equally as impressive. Its students have been finalists in state and city academic competitions, and its agriculture program is one of the best in the country.

What is Ysleta's secret? I think some of us might find the answer a bit surprising. Ysleta doesn't rely on gimmicks or fancy equipment or expensive facilities to educate its students—in fact, its per pupil expenditure is only a little more than $2,500 per academic year. What Ysleta's students have is far more valuable than anything with a price tag—they have reliance on each other, their parents, and their teachers.

Let me read you a quote from an article discussing Ysleta in the Albuquerque Journal. This is a quote from David Villarreal, one of the five students admitted to MIT:

> When I walk through the halls, everyone congratulates me. I have all kinds of friends here—athletes, really smart kids, and I even get along with gang members. No one has ever offered me drugs and no one makes fun of me for being smart.

"No one makes fun of me for being smart." Mr. President, I think David's words speak volumes. Rather than wringing our hands, as I mentioned earlier, we need to encourage, not discourage, our students. We need to let them know that it's okay to be smart, that smart people get ahead, and that they're good for our communities and our country.

We too often stereotype negatively our smartest students as antisocial eggheads, when, in fact, intelligence comes in all shapes, sizes, sexes and races. It transcends financial and social barriers.

Another quote that caught my attention was a statement by Jesus regarding the school's struggling financial situation. "We don't use money as an excuse to fail like other schools," he says. "We just learn how to do things without money. We've become very resourceful."

Again, I think we could learn a thing or two from the students at Ysleta. We talk a lot about how we're not spending enough on education, but I think these students show us that money is not an ends in itself. It certainly plays a role in how well we educate our students, but it alone does not solve all of our problems. Creativity, self-discipline, and support—these are elements that don't equate with dollars, yet they are as precious in achieving academic success. Jesus cites resourcefulness as a key element in his success, and I think the Congress should take his advice to heart. We need to start being a bit more resourceful ourselves when we look at educational reform.

It's also important to stress the role that the parents and teachers of these students have played in their academic success. Without support and encouragement at home, academic excellence is difficult. I'm certain their parents are very pleased with all that they have accomplished, and I'm equally as certain that some credit for the success of these students belongs with the parents.

Further, as teachers at Ysleta have obviously proven, dedicated and innovative teachers and educators who care about their students and their profession are priceless. I think this makes it clear that we need to continue to take the steps necessary to give teachers the freedom and flexibility they need to provide our students with a top-notch education. I commend the teachers and administrators at Ysleta High School for their work. They obviously put important time and effort into their work, and it shows.

Mr. President, I think Ysleta serves as a shining example of what is right with American schools. We don't think we stop to point this out often enough. I would once again like to commend Enrique, Alicia, Jesus, Lilian, and David for their remarkable accomplishments. The students, teachers, and administrators at Ysleta deserve our praise and warmest congratulations for making their school the very best it can be. They have taken advantage of an endowment that no one can pay for—their hearts, heads, and individual gifts.•

• Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, recently Sandra Mims of Chocot Elementary School in Little Rock, AR, was named Teacher of the Year by the Arkansas State PTA.

This outstanding elementary teacher began her teaching career in 1967 in Louisiana. In 1983 she came to Arkansas and taught at the elementary level at Geyer Springs First Baptist Church Kindergarten. She then taught for 3 years at Wakefield Elementary in the Pulaski County Special School District until 1987 when she jointed the faculty at Chicot Elementary.

Nominated by her local PTA where she has also been an officer, Sandra was selected Teacher of the Year in a statewide competition of nominees by Parent-Teacher Associations.

A dedicated wife and mother, Sandra is also active in her church and community. She has the kind of commitment to teaching that we need more of in our schools today. She considers teaching, next to motherhood, as the noblest of professions.

NATIONAL TAX FREEDOM DAY

• Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, yesterday marked Tax Freedom Day for American taxpayers—the latest date ever, according to the Tax Foundation. The average American must work 126 days, until May 5, to pay his Federal, State, and local tax bills. Starting today, many taxpayers finally begin to work for themselves and their families. In my own State of Colorado, Tax Freedom Day came last week, earlier than the national average. Taxpayers in 14 other States however, must wait another 18 or more days before they begin working for themselves than their families.

Based on 350 days in a work year, the 126 days translates to 36 percent, over one-third, of the year that the average taxpayer must work to meet his tax obligations. These obligations work out to be:

	Days
Personal income taxes	43
Social Security taxes	39
Sales and excise taxes	17
Property taxes	15
Corporate income taxes	9
All other taxes	3
Grand total	126

How many days will these obligations rise to next year? When will taxpayers be required to work 50 percent of their time to pay taxes?

The tax bite in an 8-hour day is that portion of the workday required to earn money to pay one's taxes. For 1992, that works out to 2 hours and 45 minutes—almost half the day. Of that, 1 hour and 46 minutes goes toward Federal taxes, and 59 minutes to work to pay State and local taxes.

The reality that people spend more of their workday to pay Federal taxes than they do to pay for anything else including housing and household expenses is sobering. State and local government taxes rank third above the amount of time required to work each day for such necessities as food, clothing, and medical expenses.

Mr. President, the problem is not that taxpayers are undertaxed. Congress overspends. Today taxpayers pay 113 percent more in taxes to the Federal Government than they did in 1980. The trouble is Federal spending has risen by 146 percent and is clearly out of control.

The trend toward taxpayers working longer and harder to support bigger, more costly government is not the direction in which this country should be headed. Doing more with less has become a way of life for many individuals and families throughout this country. Perhaps Government should learn this lesson as well.•

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

• Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, the week of May 3 to May 9, 1992, is National Tourism Week. As a member of the U.S. Senate tourism caucus, and a proud Senator from one of the Nation's most dramatic and inspiring States, I am especially moved to speak today in recognition of this important occasion.

Tourism in the United States is of great importance to people all over the world. It offers people of different cultures an opportunity to see the natural beauty of our country, to experience first-hand how we live, and how we enjoy the freedoms other nations are still struggling for today. Tourism promotes global multiculturalism in a world which needs the constant reminder that people of all cultures can live peacefully side-by-side and learn from, and respect, one another.

In my State of Arizona, tourism offers the opportunity to share both the beauty of nature and that of its people with the rest of the country and the world. In 1990 alone, Arizona warmly received over 2.6 million foreign visitors. Arizona ranked 6th out of the 50 States in terms of popularity among foreign visitors.

These foreign visitors were treated to some of the many exciting sights of the State. The Grand Canyon, for example, stands regally as the crown jewel of the National Parks System, and remains a popular tourist attraction as one of the seven natural wonders of the world. Arizonans proudly point to the towering red rocks of Sedona, the haunting beauty of the Arizona desert, and the exciting white water of the Colorado River as further testimony to the State's wondrous attractions.

Arizona offers visitors a dynamic venue for combining both business and pleasure. Phoenix and Tucson are excellent examples of energetic environments for conducting and exploring business opportunities while providing a wide variety of activities for leisure time year round.

The people of Arizona offer visitors the greatest experience of all. The age-old traditions of the Native American, and the colorful excitement of the Mexican-American community are only two examples of the diverse, multicultural community that Arizona enjoys.

Tourism has had such a strong impact on my State that the industry has become a dynamic economic enterprise. Tourism is ranked first among industries providing the most jobs in the State. It is estimated that one in six Arizonans are employed in tourism-related jobs. This amounts to approximately 270,000 jobs in Arizona alone.

Tourism is also the second highest revenue-raising industry in Arizona. In 1990, the tourism industry raised over $6.8 billion in revenue for the State. The industry also raised approximately $250 million in State tax revenue in the same year.

We in the United States should recognize the importance of tourism and its impact in all areas. The economic and social impact worldwide highlights the importance of recognizing this industry, and we welcome tourists from all over the world to visit and enjoy this great Nation, and the great State of Arizona.•

TRIBUTE TO ROSALIND McCLELLAN

• Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to recognize a distinguished environmental leader in Colorado. Her name is Rosalind McClellan and she is leaving her post as the director of the University of Colorado's Environmental Center in Boulder, CO. I trust and hope her decision to leave the center does not signify a waning interest in environmental issues; expecting instead that she will continue to champion environmental causes and continue to be an advocate for the environment here in Colorado and beyond.

Roz, as she is affectionately called by her friends, has been an active participant in environmental matters for most of her professional life. She became director of the center in 1984. The center is the creation of the University of Colorado's [CU] student government in Boulder. It is designed to promote environmental awareness on the CU campus. It possesses one of the foremost campus recycling operations in the Nation, which is seen as a leader in organized recycling efforts by business and local governments. The center also houses an extensive environmental library complete with current environmental periodicals for use by the CU student body.

Not only does the center function as an environmental information clearinghouse, the center also hosts a number of highly professional and well-attended conferences. Since becoming director of the center, Roz has been instrumental in developing and coordinating a number of outstanding conferences on subjects ranging from the fate of the grizzly bear to the economics of wilderness preservation. She has an uncanny ability to motivate the students at the center to develop these programs, and she insists on a high standard of excellence. Under her leadership, the center has expanded to become an important contributor in addressing our pressing environmental issues.

Roz has been especially interested in protecting our forest ecosystems—particularly old growth forests. She is leaving the center so that she can contribute to the protection of old growth forests throughout the Nation, helping to survey and map old growth forests on vast stretches of our public lands. I am sure that her work will help draw attention to the plight of our old growth forests and will provide the critical information needed in developing policies that will protect this precious resource.

I have known Roz for a long time. We have worked together to help increase awareness of important environmental issues and she has been instrumental in promoting positive changes. I know she will be deeply missed at the center and the university, but that she will continue her environmental passion for our collective benefit. We wish her well.•

RECYCLED PAPER PROGRAM

• Mr. FORD. Mr. President, we are making slow but sure progress in the recycled paper program that I put in place nearly 4 years ago. In the first quarter of this calendar year the Government paid 25 percent less—$2 million less—than we did the first 3 months of last year. And we got more paper and envelopes. My second quarterly report on the Federal use of recycled printing and publishing papers shows 800,000 more pounds of paper in use, 6 million more recycled envelopes, and 600,000 more recycled cartons than were used between January 1 and March 30 of last year. These statistics argue well for the theory I began with, that if the U.S. Government becomes a significant user of recycled printing papers, the U.S. paper industry will respond. And that if the Government holds the price line and competes its needs aggressively, costs will come down. If we are to meet our stated objectives of reducing the massive and costly glut of waste paper in our landfills and further our Government's use of recycled paper, we need to have a market out there to complete the process. Mr. President, I offer this second report on the use of recycled paper as more evidence of our success. The statistics have been prepared and compiled by the Government Printing Office and submitted to me by the Public Printer.

The report follows:

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

• Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report prepared by the Congressional Budget Office under section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 605(b) and section 311 of the Budget Act.

The report shows that current level spending exceeds the budget resolution by $6.5 billion in budget authority and by $6.1 billion in outlays. Current level is $2.9 billion above the revenue floor in 1992 and $0.7 billion below the revenue floor over the 5 years, 1992–96.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount is $354.4 billion, $3.2 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1992 of $351.2 billion.

Since my last report, dated April 28, 1992, there has been no action that affects the current level of budget authority, outlays or revenues.

Sincerely

SALUTE TO WISCONSIN'S SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the achievements of Otto Rusch from Washburn, WI, who has been selected as Wisconsin's 1992 Small Business Person of the Year by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Otto has traveled a long road to become president of Washburn Iron Works, Inc. He started his foundry career in 1949 as an industrial engineer and foreman. Over the years he rose up the ranks of different foundries—along the way learning valuable knowledge which would one day pay off.

His moment came in 1976 when he was able to purchase his own foundry. Like thousands of other successful small business owners across the country, Otto saw his opportunity, risked everything he had, and seized the moment. That year he started operations with only nine employees and no standing contracts. Otto carved out his niche by doing small jobs which were ignored by the larger foundries. As business picked up, Otto made important adjustments to modernize his foundry which ensured its survival during tough times.

Otto made his business work through foresight and tenacity. Washburn Iron Works now employs over 41 people, and he has plans to expand in the near future.

As ranking member of the Senate Small Business Committee, I applaud the efforts of Otto who is a symbol of thousands of other small business owners whose stories are similar to his. I am pleased today to recognize Otto Rusch, he is very deserving of the award of Wisconsin's 1992 Small Business Person of the Year.●

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TUCSON SALVATION ARMY

The Salvation Army works to foster a love of God and to provide for the needy. It offers its services to all people, regardless of color, creed, sex, or age. These services provided by the Salvation Army are invaluable, and have served to make Tucson a better place to live.

I want to offer my personal thanks for all the tireless work of the Tucson Salvation Army. As I noted, for 100 years the Tucson Salvation Army has given the very best to the community. I wish it all the best during the next 100 years.●

NEW MEXICO MAGAZINE

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this year, the oldest State magazine in the United States will celebrate 70 years of bringing to the world the beauty, culture and history of the State of New Mexico. In July, the New Mexico magazine will mark its 70th year of showcasing New Mexico and its people.

The great State of New Mexico is unique, and its distinctive characteristics provide the New Mexico magazine with a wealth of material to feature on its pages. New Mexico's landscapes are beautiful. Its people are distinctive. Its history is rich. And each month, New Mexico magazine displays this land of enchantment for New Mexicans, Americans, and people all over the world.

New Mexico magazine is different from other State magazines. Jon Bowman, editor of New Mexico magazine, says that if an article is fit to be in any other State magazine, then it is not right for New Mexico magazine. The magazine is more than a travel log. It is more than a topical publication. It features New Mexico's colorful people, as well as its glorious scenery. The magazine focuses on the artists, the writers, the scientists, the Native Americans, the cowboys, and the many other people who add to New Mexico's unique cultural montage.

New Mexico magazine is the oldest State magazine in the country, coming into existence as the New Mexico Highway Journal in 1923. The name was changed to New Mexico magazine in 1931 after the Highway Journal and the Conservationist, published by the State Game and Fish Department, were merged.

New Mexico magazine is the third-largest State magazine in the Nation, trailing behind only Arizona Highways, and Texas Highways. The publication currently has over 125,000 readers, spread throughout all 50 States of our country, and 74 foreign countries. The number is increasing every day.

By employing an informative and entertaining style over the past 7 decades, New Mexico magazine has increased the awareness and understanding of New Mexico's culture, history, art, architecture, and people. Its pages have brought to readers such New Mexico greats as Georgia O'Keeffe, Frank Waters, Tony Hillerman, Ernie Pyle, and potter Maria Martinez. The magazine has showcased New Mexico with a beauty, dignity and style that New Mexico is happy to claim as its own.

And so, Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to join me in extending heartiest congratulations to New Mexico magazine as it celebrates 70 years of excellence. I commend those with the magazine now, and honor their forebears. I salute New Mexico magazine with the very best of wishes as it continues the legacy of presenting the best of New Mexico.●

SMALL BUSINESSES SUPPORT BALANCED BUDGET/TAX LIMITATION AMENDMENT

• Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, when we begin debate on a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution next month I plan to offer Senate Joint Resolution 182, one balanced budget/tax limitation amendment. Presently, Senators BROWN, LOTT, DOLE, COATS, SYMMS, BURNS, SMITH, HELMS, D'AMATO, SPECTER, MACK, GARN, MURKOWSKI, MCCAIN, PRESSLER, ROTH, SEYMOUR, NICKLES, GRASSLEY, and GRAMM are cosponsoring this constitutional amendment. The amendment requires a three-fifths supermajority vote of both the House and Senate in order to deficit spend. However, to prevent Congress from balancing the budget on the backs of taxpayers, it also requires a three-fifths vote of both Houses of Congress in order to increase taxes above the rate of economic growth.

A strong provision is needed to limit tax increases, otherwise a balanced budget amendment could give Congress an excuse to continually raise taxes rather than reduce the growth rate of Government spending. Moreover, history shows that each $1 in higher taxes generates $1.59 in congressional spending. Today, the Federal Government will spend more than 25 percent of the Nation's annual wealth, the highest since the Second World War. Higher levels of government taxes and spending as a percentage of GNP would lead to an unbalanced economy with higher unemployment, lower productivity, and reduced private sector activity.

My balanced budget/tax limitation amendment has the support of broad-based coalition of small business, farm and taxpayer organizations including Citizens for a Sound Economy, National Tax Limitation Committee, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, U.S. Business and Industrial Council, American Legislative Exchange Council, National Federation of Independent Business, American Farm Bureau Federation, National Cattleman's Association, Council for Citizens Against Government Waste, Americans for Tax Reform, Americans for a Balanced Budget, and Consumer Alert Advocate.

In my position as ranking member of the Small Business Committee, I have heard from the small business community about the need for a balanced budget amendment with a strong tax limitation provision. I would like to call to the attention of the Senate a letter to President Bush from the National Federation of Independent Business in support of a balanced budget/tax limitation amendment. I ask that this letter be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The letter follows:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS,
Washington, DC, May 5, 1992.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I understand that your Administration will soon be testifying on the issue of attaching a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. I wanted to let you know how the small business community views this issue.

In April, the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) conducted an informal poll of our membership on the balanced budget amendment issue. They strongly support a balanced budget amendment which includes tax limitation language. Small business owners are very concerned that without the Kasten/Barton tax limitation language, Congress will balance the budget on the backs of small businesses. It is important that your Administration take a position in strong support of the Kasten/Barton tax limitation language.

Over the last decade, NFIB members have repeatedly expressed their concern over the inability of the federal government to live within its means. Their concern over the budget deficit was made extremely clear during a poll we did in January of this year. When NFIB members were asked whether Congress should cut taxes or focus on reducing the deficit, 72% responded that Congress should focus on reducing the deficit.

The federal deficit is severely impairing our competitiveness and limiting our ability to respond to economic downturns. In prior recessions, the federal government has been able to boost its spending to soften the blow of a recession. unfortunately, it is hard to boost spending when we are already spending $400 billion more than we have.

Purely legislative attempts to curb federal spending have failed miserably. The federal deficit has continued to skyrocket. Interest payments on the national debt now exceed what we pay for national defense.

The federal deficit is not a result to too little taxation. The deficit is a result of federal spending that is out of control. Tax limitation language forces both Congress and the Administration to make the tough spending choices that have been repeatedly put off for the last decade.

I urge you to strongly support the Kasten/Barton version of the balanced budget amendment.

Sincerely,

S. JACKSON FARIS,

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY, 14TH EVACUATION HOSPITAL

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the 14th Evacuation Hospital. A reunion to observe this auspicious occasion is being held in Watertown, NY, from June 25 to 28, 1992. Veterans who served with the unit in India and Burma during World War II are expected to attend. Lt. Marion Massaro, who was a nurse at the hospital, and her husband, Lt. Col. Pat Massaro, retired, are hosting the visitors who will be coming from all over the country to observe this event.

The "14th" was activated at Camp Claiborne, LA, on August 15, 1942. Many of the medical staff came from New York's City Hospital. The draftees who had been farmers, bank tellers, artists, students, and musicians suddenly became medical technicians, orderlies, cooks, and supply clerks. After intensive training and maneuvers, the unit was assigned to the China Burma India theater of operations and left Staten Island in an overcrowded troopship on July 9, 1943, sailing around Capetown and arriving in Bombay, 35 days later. The medical personnel then traveled 11 days by railroad cars on narrow-gauge rails to the jungles of Assam, India, under orders to erect and operate an evacuation hospital. They arrived at the site to find a muddy area covered by dense undergrowth and foliage and no buildings.

With the capture of the Burma Road by the Japanese, American engineers were building the Ledo Road to establish a supply line between Burma and China, and forces were fighting in Burma. Many soldiers were desperately in need of hospital care. In record time a hospital consisting of bamboo wards, surgical operating rooms, clinics, and laboratories was built. Many hardships were overcome in constructing the hospital including working through the monsoon season and using crude equipment and primitive tools.

The hospital wards soon overflowed with American and Chinese battle casualties and victims of typhus and malaria. Many American, Chinese, and Indian lives were saved thanks to the dedication and commitment of the personel of the hospital. The 14th Evacuation Hospital deserves recognition for their exemplary contributions to the war effort. As such, I rise today to ask my colleagues to remember the "14th" during June 25 to 28 this year as the survivors, friends, and families come together to celebrate their 50th anniversary.•

H.J. Res. 466. Joint resolution designating April 26, 1992, through May 2, 1992, as "National Crime Victims' Rights Week."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 251. Joint resolution to designate the month of May 1992 as "National Huntington's Disease Awareness Month";

S.J. Res. 276. Joint resolution to designate May 1992, as "Older Americans Month"; and

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON FORESTS, FAMILY FARMS, AND ENERGY, OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE TODAY

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Forests, Family Farms, and Energy of the Committee on Agriculture be allowed to sit under the 5-minute rule today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SKAGGS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SOLOMON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that our ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture objects to this, so I would respectfully object on their behalf until we can get it cleared up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his request?

Mr. JONTZ. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would note that 10 objections are required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A sufficient number has objected.

Objection is heard.

ANNOUNCING THE DEATH OF THE HONORABLE WILBUR MILLS

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I have the sad duty as dean of the Arkansas delegation to announce the death of the late Wilbur Mills. On Saturday evening, May 2, Mr. Mills died in his sleep, and he was buried yesterday in his hometown of Kensett, AR.

Those of us who had the privilege of serving with Mr. Mills remember him as the powerful and legendary chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Speaker, I will join with other Members who remember Mr. Mills to take a special order some time next week in order to memorialize the great chairman. The time of the special order will be announced.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SKAGGS). The Chair will announce that 1 minutes will be limited to 10 per side.

NOT SO FAST, MR. PRESIDENT

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the President has announced he has a comprehensive plan for billions of dollars in aid. And we wants it immediately.

To help the 170 workers at United Technologies in Port Huron, MI, who, as we speak, have gotten their pink slips? To help our crumbling cities?

To help our families who are in need of aid? No; to help the former republics of the Soviet Union.

This week, over 100 of my colleagues have joined in sending the President a message: "Not so fast, Mr. President." Americans are tired of being told to wait our turn, to go to the back of the line.

We have a different idea. If we can put aid to the former Soviet Union on a fast track, we can move aid on a fast track for Americans. The scrambling at the White House today to try to figure out what is happening in America, where have they been for the past 12 years? For the President, the problems of Americans have been put on a back burner and the pilot light has gone out.

This country needs a pilot, and we need a leader, and we need it now.

THE DEMOCRATS HAVE BECOME PRETTY GOOD CENSORS

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, some months ago when the issue was on the floor about whether or not taxpayer money should be spent for pornography, we had lots of Democrats come to the floor at that time saying it was censorship not to spend taxpayer money for pornographic art and literature and a number of other things. Now we find out the Democrats have become pretty good censors themselves.

Yesterday they threw out of the committee room the C-SPAN cameras that wanted to cover a Committee on Rules meeting, and denied them the ability to cover that.

Now we learn today that they have also thrown out of the Rayburn room a gentleman who wanted to talk about a book he has written which just happens to be critical of the House Democrats. The Democrats today told him he couldn't explain his book and talk about his book in a room on Capitol Hill.

So we are finding the Democrats are pretty good censors themselves when it comes to questions that protect their political fortunes.

VIETNAM VETERANS MEMORIAL 10TH ANNIVERSARY DAY

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, November 13, 1992, will be the 10th anniversary of the dedication of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial here in Washington. To mark this very important occasion, my colleague from Arizona, BOB STUMP and I are introducing a joint resolution today which designates November 13 as "Vietnam Veterans Memorial 10th Anniversary Day" and calls on the President to issue a proclamation requesting that all citizens observe this milestone with appropriate activities.

Now the most-visited monument in the Nation's Capital, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial stands as a powerful tribute to some of our best and bravest. It honors those who served, those who died, and those who remain listed as missing in action.

None of us could have imagined the impact that this memorial would have on veterans and American society in general. It has helped heal the wounds that divided our Nation during and after the Vietnam war.

I invite each of my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution as we honor this magnificent monument, the Vietnam Memorial.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION'S BUDGET SHOULD BE CUT

(Mr. ALLEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government needs to set priorities in spending and it is high time action be taken to downsize bureaucracy in favor of actual delivery of service out in the field.

I will soon introduce legislation to increase and improve the education resources and priorities of local school districts. Taxpayers are not impressed to learn that there are 4,600 bureaucrats on the $300 million payroll at the Federal Department of Education. They believe this enormous bureaucracy has no direct impact on the actual education of their children.

Mr. Speaker, my legislation will reduce the bureaucracy by calling for a 10-percent cut in the Department of Education's personnel budget by $56 million over a 2-year period. Ninety percent of these savings will be sent directly to the local schools where real education takes place, and the remaining 10 percent would be used for deficit reduction.

Local school boards and communities can best determine their education spending needs; be it textbooks, buildings or teacher salaries.

I ask my colleagues to join me in turning back the bureaucracy by signing on to my bill as an original sponsor. The choice is simple, would you rather spend this money in your local schools or in the Federal bureaucracy? This bill can put you on record in support of your local schools and in support of some deficit reduction, rather than keeping funds in Washington to feed a generally irrelevant Federal bureaucracy.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mrs. COLLINS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I was called away to Detroit on urgent business on the evening of Thursday, April 30, 1952 and was unable to place my vote on H.R. 3090, the Public Health Service Act. Had I been present, I would have voted in favor of this measure.

15,000 CENTRAL FLORIDIANS SAY "CORRECT THE NOTCH"

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to rise today and show you these petitions with the names of 15,000 Central Floridians. They want their Federal Government to correct the Social Security notch.

Legislation to correct the notch inequity has been languishing before the House Committee on Ways and Means for months now—despite having 283 cosponsors.

There is every reason to bring notch reform legislation to the House floor for a fair and open debate.

A byproduct of this matter for Florida is the benefit it would bring the State's economy. The Bureau of Economic and Business Research at the University of Florida estimates that passage of notch reform legislation would result in almost $900 million of disposable income for Florida. This would boost the State's tax base by more than $51 million from the State's sales tax alone.

Passing notch reform legislation would result in more activity for local businesses and more revenues for State, local and Federal governments.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you and other Members of the House leadership to bring H.R. 917, the notch reform bill, to the House floor. These 15,000 central Floridians deserve this action and so do the 283 Members who cosponsored it.

ARMORED CAR INDUSTRY RECIPROCITY ACT

(Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Armored Car Industry Reciprocity Act to ensure that States provide recognition for weapons licenses of armored car guards when they cross State lines delivering valuables.

The Federal Government ships billions of dollars' worth of currency, coins, food stamps, and precious metals across the country using armored car companies.

I was therefore surprised to learn that an armored car guard's license to carry a weapon in one State is not honored in other States. Under the current system, a guard would have to obtain a separate license in each State.

Unfortunately, what all too often happens is that the crews simply drive through the States without proper licenses. When they are stopped by authorities, the crew can face criminal charges and the valuables in the car may be placed in jeopardy.

The simplest solution to the problem of interstate commerce for valuable property is to require States to provide reciprocity for out-of-State weapons permits, solely for the purposes of armored car crews engaged in interstate commerce.

The Armored Car Industry Reciprocity Act provides such reciprocity, and is endorsed not only by the industry, but the users of armored cars, including the Federal Government. The bill is supported by the Fraternal Order of Police and the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

I want to stress that this is not an issue of gun control. The bill neither takes guns away from those armored car personnel with licenses nor puts them into the hands of those without licenses. The bill is strictly limited to the narrow situation of interstate travel by armored car crews.

For this reason, the bill has been reviewed both by the National Rifle Association and Handgun Control, and neither group raised any problems.

This is a short and commonsense bill that resolves a problem of interstate commerce. Its broad support is further proof of this fact.

There are many examples of armored car companies carrying shipments of valuables across State lines for the Federal Government. For example, the American Bank Note Co. prints food stamps in Pennsylvania, which are shipped by armored car to 3,500 distribution points across the country. A typical vehicle carries about $75 million worth of food stamps.

The U.S. Mints in Philadelphia, Denver, and San Francisco ship coins across the country by armored car. A typical shipment might take the coin from Philadelphia to Florida, passing through Delaware, Maryland Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. The return route could include a completely different set of States.

There are also problems for private companies. Problems particularly arise for companies operating in metropolitan areas near States lines. For example, companies carry currency between Gary, IN and Chicago, IL. Small, independent companies are placed at a distinct disadvantage because of the cost of obtaining multiple licenses.

There have been numerous examples of armored cars being stopped and their crew and cargo placed in jeopardy. For example, recently, an armored car company was moving $50 million in food stamps from Pennsylvania to upstate New York. When stopped at a weigh station, police asked to see the guard and drivers weapons permits. When they produced New Jersey permits, the driver was arrested and placed in jail, while the guard was left unarmed with the truck containing the $50 million. The next day charges were dismissed.

In Louisiana, another armored car containing food stamps was stopped on a routine traffic check. The armed guards, who had licenses from Pennsylvania were arrested and taken to jail while the truck was left along the side of the road. The charges were later dismissed.

In Virginia, an armored car transporting currency from the Bureau of Engraving to North Carolina was stopped by the police and their weapons confiscated, leaving them to proceed with their multi-million dollar cargo without weapons.

As I stated earlier, there is support for the bill from the Federal agencies involved in this matter. There have been expressions of support from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the Bureau of the Mint, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Department of Agriculture, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the FBI, and the U.S. Marshal Service.

The bill establishes minimum State standards for the granting of weapons licenses to armored car crews in order to qualify for reciprocity. These minimum standards require criminal background checks and annual classroom and range training. While States are in no way required to adopt these minimum standards—and most States already have such requirements—the attraction of reciprocity will likely encourage armored car companies and the States to adopt such standards, if they do not already exist.

"AMERICA'S CHALLENGE" BREAST CANCER AWARENESS IN FLORIDA

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, on May 9, thousands of Floridians will unite to fight a killer that will claim the lives of nearly 45,000 women nationwide this year. They will gather together in the streets, schools, parks, and on the beaches of 32 Florida towns and cities to send a message aimed at saving women's lives.

That message is America's challenge: To inform the public that every woman is at risk for breast cancer and every woman has the power to fight back by taking action.

The American Cancer Society's Florida division established the Mother's Day weekend event "America's Challenge" to help women save themselves from breast cancer. The event will occur simultaneously throughout the State and will offer participants a chance to learn more about breast cancer, as well as offer one another support by simply uniting in a common cause. The highlight of the event is an opening ceremony followed by a symbolic walk toward action on breast cancer.

This weekend, Floridian women will be taking action to have a voice in the medical and legislative processes that directly affect their lives; they will have the most visible opportunity yet to demonstrate their commitment to fighting breast cancer.

URGING THE PRESIDENT TO TAKE A LOOK AT OUR CITIES

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the British and the French have blamed the Reagan-Bush policies for the riots in Los Angeles. President Bush said, "Hogwash." He said, "It's all the fault of LBJ." That is right, Lyndon Baines Johnson, and to prove it, now that John Sununu is gone and the plane is available, he is going to fly to Los Angeles.

Mr. Speaker, the President should stop in Miami and Cleveland, Philadelphia and New York, Boston, Chicago, Newark, because the truth of the matter is America is on fire, and the American people are fed up, fed up with a White House that spends more time on the Mideast than the Midwest, more time on job creation in Mexico than in our own country.

Mr. Speaker, Congress and the White House better read the graffiti on all these abandoned factories in the inner city. I think it is time to take a look at our cities and at the people in America who cannot pursue life, liberty, and happiness without a job.

WHAT ARE YOU AFRAID OF, MR. SPEAKER?

(Mr. ZELIFF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ZELIFF. Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder Mr. Speaker, that the American people are upset with Congress. Almost every Member talks about cutting the budget, or balancing the budget, when they are back home.

Yet when the President proposes specific places to cut the budget called rescissions we are now being told that it is against Congresses rules to allow individual votes on these specific budget cuts.

People are out of work, Mr. Speaker. There is rioting in the streets. The people want jobs. The American people want us to cut the budget, to stimulate economic growth, and to create good high-paying jobs.

The American people are sick of these partisan political games. Democrats and Republicans can disagree on whether or not these budget cuts should be made.

But it is inexcusable not to let us vote on these individual proposed budget cuts. No wonder that over 50 Members are quitting Congress, when heavy-handed rules will not even let them vote, "Yes" or "No," on specific budget cuts.

Let us vote on these individual budget cuts, Mr. Speaker. Let the voices of the peoples representatives be heard. What are you afraid of, Mr. Speaker?

URGING THE PRESIDENT NOT TO VETO THE CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM BILL

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, last week I talked about the brave 33, those 33 Republican challengers for Congress, who wrote the President urging him not to veto the campaign finance reform bill. I am pleased to note in this morning's Post that these brave 33 are joined by 15 cohorts, 15 former Members of Congress of the Republican Party, who have also urged the President not to veto this bill.

Mr. Speaker, for weeks I have been urging the President to sign this bill into law. It is a modest step forward. It puts limits on campaign spending, reduces the influence and clout of political action committees. It balances campaigns. It makes them more competitive.

But if not for me, Mr. Speaker, certainly for these brave Republicans, now 48, I hope that the President will, in fact, not veto that bill, but proudly sign it into law.

NATIONAL TOURIST APPRECIATION DAY

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, as the author of the original National Tourism Week in 1984, I am pleased to take to the floor today to call attention to this ninth National Tourism Week and, more specifically, to today as we celebrate National Tourist Appreciation Day.

So much is happening to build our jobs and our economy through the industry of tourism. So many public-private partnerships are out there. I am proud that my home State of Pennsylvania joined recently with the State of Rhode Island to cooperatively market our States as destinations for the citizens of Germany, a very lucrative market for the United States tourism industry. There is so much German heritage in Pennsylvania, and this regional market development plan, put together by the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration [USTTA] is a means of pooling our resources and attracting German tourists to some of the very special places that America has to offer. USTTA has done a fine job in stimulating these public-private partnerships.

In 1990, the Keystone State was visited by over 1.3 million foreign travelers, and in 1989, the last year for which we have financial data, generated over a half a billion dollars in revenues for our State and its communities.

Mr. Speaker, this is a positive story of seeking positive trade balance for our Nation. Tourism's growth has provided needed impetus for American economic development and so it is only fitting that we celebrate National Tourism Appreciation Day and National Tourism Week.

GOOD ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY IS GOOD ECONOMICS

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, many people believe that there is a fundamental conflict between caring for our environment and building a healthy economy. Nothing could be further from the truth, and today I am introducing a bill with my colleague from New York, NITA LOWEY, that proves this point.

Our bill, the Water Pollution Control and Estuary Restoration Financing Act, has received the support of a remarkable coalition of business, labor, and environmental groups—groups who understand that unless we clean up our waterways and estuaries we will lose an important economic resource that generates millions of jobs.

In my State of Connecticut, the Long Island Sound is dying—literally choking to death. Without our help, not only will the Sound be destroyed, but so will the economy of Connecticut's shoreline communities. This is true in many other States with estuaries whose delicate ecological balance is being threatened, and with it the jobs and businesses that depend on those waterways.

Our bill would reauthorize essential components of the Clean Water Act and reaffirm the Federal commitment to clean water—and it gives voice to the increasing calls for action on the Clean Water Act.

Good environmental policy is good economics. It is time we understood this simple fact before both our natural and economic resources become hopelessly damaged.

WE NEED TO PROMOTE TOURISM IN THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, one of the unfortunate side effects of the Los Angeles riots, and there were many side effects, was a cancellation by major tourist firms in Japan and elsewhere on planned trips to that area which would have netted for that area millions of dollars and boosted the economy. It pointed out to many of us how important tourism is to the United States in this cycle of our economy, as in any other time. So, we want to make special effort to reemphasize how important it is to promote tourism and to make sure that we in our various several States point out the attributes of our own areas for visiting people from outside our country and within our country.

Mr. Speaker, we in Pennsylvania, as the previous speaker from Pennsylvania has noted, we have Independence Hall, and Hershey, and a lot of Revolutionary and Civil War monuments and places, like Gettysburg and Valley Forge. Tourism is alive and well, and we ought to promote it within our country and beyond its borders.

SOUTH CAROLINA ATTRACTING TOURISTS THROUGH PROMOTIONAL CAMPAIGN

(Mr. TALLON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate National Tourism Week this week, I am pleased to note that my State of South Carolina has been involved with Delta Airlines in a new marketing campaign to bring visitors from the United Kingdom to South Carolina.

This has been done in conjunction with the United States Travel and Tourism Administration which just completed their historic promotional campaign in the United Kingdom featuring a video invitation from President Bush inviting the Brits to our shores.

USTTA's calculations are that British requests for information about American tourist destinations are already up by 5 percent over 1990 levels. This is good news for promotion efforts in South Carolina and nationwide.

THE DISTRICT DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIP ACT

(Mr. HOLLOWAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I am introducing a resolution of disapproval of the District's Domestic Partnership Act. I was sought out by about 100 pastors here in the D.C. area who lobbied the council not to aprove this bill.

If there ever was an attack on the family in this country, it is this Domestic Partnership Act. The ministers here see the problems that come from it.

As a member of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, I have always sought to build the family and not to destroy the family in this country. To me, this bill totally destroys the families of this country.

Just to tell my colleagues how ridiculous this bill is, to qualify for insurance as an employee of the District of Columbia, all one has to do is go down, like getting a parking permit, and sign up and say, "This is my domestic partner." One has to have no ties, no binds.

It is good for 6 months. It is good for people who live together whether it is for 1 day or if they never live together.

If one has a problem, all one has to do is go down and sign up, find a partner, and they are good.

I hope that Members will join me in cosponsoring this bill to where we can defeat it in committee.

THE RODNEY KING VERDICT

(Mr. HAYES of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, about a week has passed since the verdict in the Rodney King Los Angeles police brutality case was rendered, and I am still disappointed, angered, and shocked. I am outraged by this travesty of justice. We all saw on tape, in living color, these officers kick, stomp, and strike Rodney King some 50 times. Yet a jury, clearly influenced and swayed by the racist ills of this society, found the officers not guilty.

Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed today not only because justice did not prevail in this case, but also because the leaders of this country have chosen to politicize an incident which requires real solutions and not 1-minute sound bites. Mr. Speaker, I can see it now. The focus on the 1992 election has been defined. Willie Horton has been set aside, and now Rodney King and the Los Angles riots have taken his place. Instead of speaking the truth and acknowledging the fact that the Government's total and callous disregard for the poor and minority throughout the Reagan-Bush era has produced an environment where race hate and violence have been able to cultivate. We cannot stand by and merely accept the outcome of this very uneven and unfair system of justice.

There is a national, multiracial outcry for justice, and we must respond. I challenge the Attorney General William Barr to conduct a thorough and unbiased investigation of this matter. Rodney King's, as well as all Americans', civil rights are at stake. However, more importantly, we as a nation must reflect on the direction that we are moving in this country. The Rodney King incident is not an isolated case and such violent behavior cannot be accepted by so-called peacekeepers in our communities. We have come too far to turn back now, and we must not accept a return to the time when a black man can be beaten and lynched without retribution. I certainly know that I fear the message that has been sent by last week's verdict.

A CASE OF INACTION BY THE SERBIAN GOVERNMENT

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, Shayna Lazarevich is a bright young American mother, with two small American children. She has not been able to see these children on any type of long-term basis since October 1989, when her ex-husband fled with her two small children to Serbia.

I personally have been involved in this case for over 2 years. I have written multiple letters to Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, traveled to Belgrade to meet with him and other officials on this case, made countless telephone calls, and arranged appeals signed by more than 30 fellow Members.

Other people involved in this case include Representative ANTHONY BEILENSON, Secretary of State James Baker, and United States Ambassador to Yugoslavia, Warren Zimmerman.

Four years ago, her ex-husband's final custody appeal in the Serbian courts was denied. We were all relieved that Shayna would get her children back.

Just to be sure, I sent an appeal signed by 14 Members to President Milosevic to ensure that the children be placed in protective custody until Shayna could get them back.

Shayna called yesterday, her children were not in school. Warren Zimmerman called this morning: the Ministry of Justice told him that Shayna's ex-husband once again had fled with the children, and that she should hire a private detective to find him.

Mr. Speaker, there simply is no excuse for the inaction of the Serbian Government in this case. I stand today to condemn the inability of the Serbian Government to come to a resolution of this case, and its callousness in its response to protect the rights of these Americans.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S SCANDAL IN IRAQ

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, recent press reports indicate that President Bush and his operatives at the State, Justice, and Agriculture Departments repeatedly authorized food loans to Iraq, backed by taxpayer dollars, even when it is alleged that they knew, back in 1989, that the food and money were being diverted, possibly for the Iraqis to obtain weapons. Over a period of 7 years, up until 1990, the U.S. Government provided Iraq nearly $5 billion in loans, supposedly to purchase food through the Commodity Credit Corporation.

On July 28, during the floor debate on the 1990 farm bill, and 5 days before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, I offered an amendment to cut these loans off to Iraq because the scandal started to leak to me, to other Members, and to the press. What did the administration do? They strongly lobbied against my amendment for fear it would hurt United States relations with Iraq.

The expression "hindsight is 20/20" does not apply in the case of Iraq. This misguided, ill-conceived, and obsequitous policy toward Iraq and the resulting war and lost lives may have been avoided if the administration had taken a stand against fraud and abuse the minute his advisers suspected Iraq's wrongdoing.

I urge my colleagues, including the gentleman from Texas, Congressman GONZALEZ, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Congressman ROSE, to follow up on this matter, as they have been doing in the past.

DO-NOTHING NEW WORLD ORDER

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would prefer the New Frontier of President John F. Kennedy, the Beloved Community of Martin Luther King, Jr, the Better World of Robert F. Kennedy, and the Great Society of Lyndon Johnson over the do-nothing New World Order of the present administration.

For too long, we have had an administration in Washington that has been out of step and out of tune. It has shown great insensitivity to the lives of minorities and low-income Americans. Too many people have been left out and left behind during the past 12 years.

We need an administration that understands the frustrations and the problems that led to the destruction and violence in Los Angeles. We need presidential leadership that understand the lives of poor and minority Americans.

Mr. Speaker, we don't have that leadership. We don't have an administration with a sense of vision or a commitment to the common good.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2039, LEGAL SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1991

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 444 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 444

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2039) to authorize appropriations for the Legal Services Corporation, and for other purposes. An additional period of general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed thirty minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Judiciary, shall be in order. Following the additional period of general debate, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule and said substitute shall be considered as having been read. No amendment to said substitute shall be in order except the amendments printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Said amendments shall be considered in the order and manner specified in the report and shall be considered as having been read. Said amendments shall be debatable for the period specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a member opposed thereto. Said amendments shall not be subject to amendment except as specified in the report of the Committee on Rules. It shall be in order at any time for the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to offer amendments en bloc consisting of amendments, and modifications in the text of any amendments which are germane thereto, printed in the report of the Committee on Rules. Such amendments en bloc shall be considered as having been read and shall be debatable for not to exceed twenty minutes, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The original proponents of the amendments en bloc shall have permission to insert statements in the Congressional Record immediately before disposition of the amendments en bloc. Such amendments en bloc shall not be subject to amendment, or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House or any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The previous question shall be considered as having been ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. Madam Speaker, during consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purposes of debate only.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 444 is the second rule providing for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2039, the Legal Services Authorization Act. As my colleagues are aware, the first rule for this legislation provided only for general debate. This rule we have before us today provides for additional general debate and for the consideration and disposition of amendments.

As I previously stated, House Resolution 444 provides for 30 additional minutes of general debate to be equally divided between and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The rule makes in order the Judiciary Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment.

Madam Speaker, the rule makes in order only the amendments printed in the report to accompany the rule. The amendments are to be considered in the order and manner specified in the report and shall be debatable for the period specified in the report, the amendments are not subject to amendment, except as specified in the report.

The rule further provides the Judiciary Committee chairman the authority, at any time, to offer amendments en bloc consisting of the text of the amendments printed in the report, and germane modifications to those amendments. Madam Speaker, the amendments en bloc are debatable for 20 minutes equally divided between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The rule also provides the original proponents of the amendments en bloc the authority to insert statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The amendments en bloc are not subject to amendment, or to a demand for a division.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Madam Speaker, the bill would authorize for 5 years the Legal Services Corporation, which provides Federal funds for legal aid to the poor. The bill keeps intact the existing restrictions on lobbying, on class action suits, and on the representation of aliens.

During consideration of this bill in the Judiciary Committee, the committee added several new restrictive provisions, including those that prevent LSC funds from being used in redistricting cases and that would restrict representation of individuals convicted of the illegal sale or possession of drugs in public housing eviction cases.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 444 and support the passage of H.R. 2039.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, as I stated a few weeks ago when I handled the first rule on Legal Services, I am opposed to having a two-part rule. This is a habit we seem to be getting into around here and one that should be broken. The first rule provided for an hour of general debate, and now we are back with the second rule which provides for additional general debate. The first rule was a complete waste of our time.

Madam Speaker, the Legal Services Corporation is an independent, not-for-profit organization that provides free civil legal assistance to the poor. It was established in 1974 through the Legal Services Corporation Act; as I stated, free civil legal assistance to the poor.

That is not always the case. I am not a great fan of Legal Services, and I hope that the members of this body will take into consideration the poor job they have done in an overall manner.

The bill authorizes appropriations for the corporation for the next 5 years. As we all know, the Legal Services Corporation has not been without controversy, as I mentioned. Since the beginning, debate over the organization has always boiled down to whether it should represent only the poor or also engage in political and social causes through class action lawsuits and lobbying. It has not been reauthorized by Congress in more than 10 years, receiving its funding through the annual appropriations process.

Madam Speaker, there are many problems with this legislation. There remain concerns over federally funded Legal Service activities, such as lobbying, redistricting, circumvention of congressional intent through the use of non-Legal Services Corporation funds, and the lack of a competitive system.

The administration's statement of policy states that if this bill were presented to the President in its current form, his senior advisors would recommend a veto. It finds that one of the most critical issues is the bill's restriction on redistricting-related activities. The bill prohibits such activity only with respect to a congressional or State legislative district.

Madam Speaker, again, I am opposed to this closed rule, even though it does not make in order some of the amendments submitted to the Committee on Rules. I urge a no vote on the rule, and I hope the membership will follow my vote and vote it down, because we should not be discussing this matter at this time or at any time.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute and 30 seconds to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the rule. I would like to commend the committee for its inclusion of provisions addressing concerns raised by farm producer organizations. I know, for instance, that my food growers in West Virginia are upset about the costs of litigation and their impact on the costs of doing business.

One grower, for instance, has told me that he faced bankruptcy in part because of high legal costs. These growers have also testified that the Legal Services organizations initiate frivolous and costly litigation. This bill's provision that a defendant can recover attorneys' fees from the Legal Services Corporation in cases in which a court finds that a plaintiff's lawsuit was "frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation"; was brought to harass or retaliate against the defendant; or the lawsuit "maliciously abused the legal process" is a very, very important addition.

This language will provide redress for any grower who may be the target of frivolous lawsuits, while allowing Legal Aid lawyers to fulfill their obligations to clients whose employers do not comply with Federal standards.

I believe that the mere inclusion of this language serves as a brake on overzealous Legal Services lawyers, and that they must now seriously weigh the financial consequences of filing these unjustified lawsuits.

I am also delighted that the committee has assured me that it will continue to conduct continuing oversight to ensure that these provisions have the desired effect. I think these are very positive additions to this bill, and I thank the committee for including them.

Mr. QUILLEN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] for yielding time to me. I rise to support the opposition of the gentleman to the rule, and urge my colleagues to defeat the rule.

Madam Speaker, this is the 40th restrictive rule reported by the Committee on Rules in this Congress. That means that 66 percent of the 61 total rules have limited the amendment process. That compares with just 15 percent worth of restrictive rules back in the 95th Congress in 1977 and 1978.

I would recall to my colleagues who was the Speaker at that time. The Speaker at that time in 1977 and in 1978 was a man revered by this body and by me in particular. He was a tough, partisan Democrat, but he was fair and he was a man who we could depend on when he gave us his word.

Only 15 percent of the rules were restrictive under his rule during the 1977–78 period.

The increasing number of closed rules since that time are symbolic of a House that is becoming more and more removed from the public and less democratic.

Whereas back in the seventies we prided ourselves on bringing sunshine to this Government, today, by contrast, the Capitol dome has a huge cloud hanging over it; and there are those in this House who seem to want to wrap the entire Congress in clouds of secrecy and exclusion.

Yesterday brought home a stark example of this when the Committee on Rules was to consider rules on this legal services bill we are debating now and on the omnibus rescission bill. The majority Democrats convened our meeting a half hour late and proceeded to vote against my motion to allow broadcast coverage of our hearings by C–SPAN. The only reasons we were given were that the majority was not prepared for the coverage of the meeting and that the issues involved were, listen to this, and this is a quote now, "too technical for the American people to understand anyway."

Madam Speaker, this is the first time in my 14 years in this Congress that I have witnessed such an arbitrary and politically motivated shutdown of the TV cameras. In fact, it is the only time I have witnessed this kind of lockout for other than personal privacy or national security reasons. I can recall once or twice as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee for 6 years that we had a closed meeting for those reasons.

But, Madam Speaker, this institution is under enough of a cloud already without these new attempts at coverup and exclusion. If we begin to determine selectively what can and cannot be covered by the broadcast media, we will clearly be engaging in political censorship of the coverage of this institution, and that is wrong. That is foreign to our country and to our system of government, and it clearly violates the first amendment freedoms on which we in this body should and do ordinarily pride ourselves in protecting.

So I would urge the Rules Committee in the future not to pull the blinds of its hearing room on the video window of this world. I would also urge that we return to a policy of open rules, as under the previous speakership of Tip O'Neill, whereby all Members will be full participants in the legislative process. Our constituents will receive the full representation that they deserve.

I urge every Member to defeat this restrictive rule, and let us open up this body the way it should be.

Mr. QUILLEN. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM].

Mr. McCOLLUM. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me for the purposes of this debate. I too rise in opposition to this rule.

Frankly, this is an outrageous rule in the sense that it restricts some very important opportunities to amend this bill on the floor today, parts of this bill which really gut the opportunity for the Legal Services Corporation Board of Directors to monitor the grantees that we issue Federal money to who operate the services for the poor. I find it sad that an amendment I requested in this regard was not allowed. Only a minor amendment, which I certainly support by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in this area was allowed. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] also requested an amendment pertaining to this. We are concerned that the inspector general of the Legal Services Corporation and those in the Legal Services home office will not be able to go out and do their job to monitor Federal funds.

Under the present law established by court before this bill or this supposed bill out here today is adopted, under present law the Legal Services Corporation is entitled to review and have access to all of the recipient, all of the grantee documents of all of these nonprofits that we run this through throughout the country, so long as the corporation's purpose is to ensure the recipient's compliance with the Legal Services Act and the grant agreement. The rule is clear, it is bright, it is workable. However, under the bill that is out here today that we are not allowed to amend in any way we are not allowed to get into this record. There are provisions that would totally cripple the ability of the Legal Services Corporation to do its job of monitoring the use of Federal funds.

For example, all of the monitoring would be suspended completely, their entire monitoring powers until regulations are promulgated. Currently they do this administratively. They will have to promulgate formal regulations. After this bill goes into effect and after those regulations are adopted, I am sure they will be debated and litigated. Can Members imagine the kind of hamstringing that will be?

We currently protect the rights of attorney-client privilege. There has been no debate or no question over that. There have been no substantive reports of abuse of that. Nonetheless, we are going to have to promulgate regulations, and once adopted by regulation the procedures could only be changed by regulation, a cumbersome process.

The fact of the matter is the corporation will be required, under areas we are not allowed to amend, to negotiate any and all standards. The corporation home office will be required to negotiate any and all standards over the conduct of the monitoring, and that is flatly inconsistent with the nature of monitoring in the first place.

The corporation will be required to observe the privacy protections of all 50 States' privacy laws. In a State like California where they have a new constitutional privacy requirement, we do not know that this means yet, and, in fact, we do not know whether in the interpretations that may come down whether the inspector general will any longer be allowed to look at even the salaries being paid to the grantees, and that consists of the use of about 70 percent of the corporation's funds.

The bill goes on and on with these kinds of oppressive regulations. It requires that the local ethics, not Federal National American Bar ethnics rules apply in every case with regard to the access of the corporation to the records of an individual grantee. It is simply an obstructive provision in this bill that means that this bill will be vetoed by the President if it is not modified, and there is no way, save a motion to instruct when we go and move to return this to committee at the end of the bill that we can possibly raise this issue, and that is not likely to be successful.

I want all Members to understand that the President has a strong statement of policy issued on this bill saying that if a number of key amendments are not adopted, and if changes are not made in this monitoring that we are now restricted by the rule that does not allow us to make changes in the monitoring restrictions, that there will be a Presidential veto. This is an outrageous situation. It is sad. All of us on this side support continued legal services for the poor, but we cannot have a Legal Services Corporation that is emasculated and unable to monitor the Federal funds that are going out and the processes by which they are doing it, and it saddens me that the Rules Committee did not allow it.

I urge in the strongest possible terms a defeat of this rule, and if this is not done then a defeat of this bill must take place, unfortunately.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Madam Speaker, as a long-time advocate of Legal Services, I would normally be inclined to support this measure we have before us today. However, due to a recent Supreme Court decision, Adams-Fruit Co. versus Barrett, the workers compensation system benefiting farmworkers is in jeopardy and a negotiated settlement on this issue is necessary if the Legal Services Program is to be effective.

In 1985, 19 migrant workers employed by the Adams Fruit Farm departed for the fields in an overloaded van. An accident resulted, and the company was liable for a violation of the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act. The injured received damages under the workers compensation system. Under workers compensation, the employer assumes all responsibility for any injuries with the assumption that the workers compensation program is the exclusive remedy for damages. However, in Adams-Fruit, the Supreme Court rules that the worker could also sue the employer for damages in addition to collecting workers compensation benefits.

This decision removes any incentive for employerso the workers compensation system. Without the exclusive remedy protection, there is no reason for an employer to pay into the system and then face the additional risk of being sued. The original intent of the migrant protection law was to protect farmworkers, not to provide them with additional remedies which undermines the workers compensation system.

Many individuals have worked hard to seek a solution to this problem. I would like to commend my colleagues Mr. LEON PANETTA, Mr. HOWARD BERMAN, and Mr. GEORGE MILLER, as well as the representatives from the Agricultural and Legal Services community who have participated in lengthy negotiations to get this resolved. I believe that some agreement on this issue is key to the Legal Services debate that we are having today. A good faith effort must be made on both sides to find a solution to the Adams-Fruit dilemma in a timely fashion.

As we proceed today there will be several amendments offered which would substantially alter the way Legal Services has traditionally operated. As part of this debate, I think it is necessary that some commitment be made to bring the negotiations on Adams-Fruit to a positive conclusion. While these issues may not be directly related, they are part of the overall context of reform of the Legal Services Program. I urge my colleagues who have expressed an interest in the Adams-Fruit decision to keep in mind the chilling impact of this decision during today's debate. Without a settlement, protracted litigation, unsustainable losses, and an undermining of the workers compensation system will result. My inclination is to support key amendment and oppose funding until this issue is resolved.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to bring this important issue to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. QUILLEN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken.

Mr. QUILLEN. Madam Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Mr. PICKLE changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday, the State of Indiana held its Presidential and congressional primaries. Because the polls did not close until evening, and my return flight to Washington was delayed this morning, regrettably I missed the three rollcall votes that were held earlier today.

If I had been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall No. 96, approving the Journal; "aye" on rollcall No. 97, a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3247, the undersea research authorization; and "aye" on rollcall No. 98, the rule for the Legal Services Corporation authorization.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and was unable to be present for rollcall votes 96, 97, and 98.

I wish it to be recorded that I would have voted "aye" on all three measures.

COMMUNICATION FROM HON. J. DENNIS HASTERT, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. UNSOELD) laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable J. DENNIS HASTERT, Member of Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 30, 1992.

Hon. THOMAS FOLEY,
Speaker of the House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House that I have been served with a subpoena issued by the Circuit Court of Kane County, Illinois, in the case of Roger X. Baker vs. Osco Drug Company (American Drugstores).

After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

Sincerely,

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Member of Congress.

LEGAL SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1991

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 444 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 2039.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2039) to authorize appropriations for the Legal Services Corporation, and for other purposes with Mr. MFUME, chairman pro tempore, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, April 2, 1992, all time for general debate pursuant to House Resolution 413 had expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 444, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 15 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, during general debate on H.R. 2039 last month, I noted how important it is to the American people that all of its citizens have access to those instruments of government that affect them, and particularly to our Nation's legal system. The events of the past few weeks have sorely tested the trust that many Americans have in that system. This week, by reauthorizing the Legal Services Corporation, the House can show its resolve that the legal system will be available to all of our citizens, regardless of their economic circumstances.

We have a number of important amendments to the Legal Services Reauthorization Act to consider. They will enable the House to work its will on the bill in an open and constructive manner. It is my hope that we will be able to move this vital piece of legislation through the process quickly, and to approve a bill that gives renewed meaning to the phrase "justice for all."

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we are eager to begin the debate on Legal Services and its reauthorization.

Mr. Chairman, I must say some of the euphoria we felt when this issue was first joined and when it first came out of committee, where many of us felt that we were way ahead of the impasse that has occurred over the years with respect to individual and collective duties and responsibilities of the Legal Services Corporation, many of us felt, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] so articulated that we are poised with a greater amount, greater degree of unanimity on most of the provisions than we ever have been before.

But since that time, since we have had this vacuum in time from the original general debate, certain things have happened, and certain positions are now being rearticulated that will make it more uncomfortable for us in the debate that is yet to come than we first thought might be the case.

So, with that in mind, we ask Members to review very carefully what is going to occur with respect to the individual positions on many of these amendments and to be circumspect in weighing what the real purpose of Legal Services Corporation is, namely to provide legal services for the poor in our country.

If that be the gauge by which we will proceed on this debate, I am certain that some of these amendments and substitutes and counteramendments, et cetera, will have to fall by the wayside, or it will be adopted based on that theme, the real purpose of the Legal Services Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balanced of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] who has worked hard and long on this bill.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank Chairman BROOKS for his hard work in this area and for allowing me to make a statement.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Legal Services reauthorization bill as reported by the Judiciary Committee. Chairman FRANK is to be commended for his diligent work in addressing so many of the concerns which have plagued this issue in the past and have prevented us from moving a reauthorization bill since 1977.

It is true that the bill is not perfect and will not satisfy the program's most ardent critics. However, as a Member who has worked for legal services reform for many years, this bill represents a successful reform effort by those of us who wanted to address criticisms of the legal services program, while maintaining the integrity of its mission—to provide low-income Americans access to justice.

Chairman FRANK personally worked with me on including important provisions to address agricultural industry concerns in the bill. Most importantly, the bill contains several provisions which will increase the accountability of the program to taxpayers. It also includes provisions which will guard against meritless litigation being pursued by Legal Services lawyers, and language which will increase the ability of farmers to defend against such suits. Moreover, the bill requires legal services programs to attempt negotiation and utilize alternative dispute resolution where appropriate. In response to complaints by farmers of phantom plaintiffs, a provision was added to require a plaintiff to sign a retainer agreement outlining the facts on which the claim is based. This agreement will be kept on file by the legal services programs for review.

On another farmer-driven provision, the bill includes a right for defendants to recover attorneys' fees from the Legal Services Corporation when they have been the victims of harassment, retaliation, or malicious abuse of the legal process, or when the action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation. This provision is in direct response to complaints from farmers that they should be compensated for attorneys' fees and costs in such instances of LSC abuse. Yet another concern of farmers which was addressed in the bill is the prohibition of solicitation of potential clients by Legal Services attorneys outside of appropriate outreach activities. An important program accountability provision was added to the bill, as well, which requires strict timekeeping and recordkeeping by legal services programs.

All of these provisions combine to address the key concerns of agricultural employers. As a Member who has been deeply involved in ensuring that farmers' concerns were addressed, I urge you to support this bill.

At a time when surveys show that 80 percent of low-income Americans who are in need of legal representation do not receive it, we must move forward with legislation which balances the necessity for program accountability with effective and fair representation. Do not allow the spurious rhetoric of the Reagan years to prevent passage of this important legislation aimed at providing access to justice for those in our society who often are in the greatest need, but have the fewest resources for redress.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] very much for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, all of us today are in support of reauthorizing the Legal Services Corporation. We may not all, however, be in support of this bill when it comes down to a final vote, and we will have a great and spirited debate over a number of amendments, I am sure.

For many years we have not been able to provide adequate resources for the poor to have true access to legal justice in this country in the civil side, the noncriminal side. We have provided inadequate resources in large measure because we simply do not have enough to go around nationwide at the Federal level. We also have not necessarily set the right priorities for that. We have gone through a grant system to States. That grant system has not, and to various nonprofit organizations, I should say, and the States and local communities; that grant system to nonprofits has not functioned as well as it should.

We have had problems of accountability. We have had instances where those organizations over the years have had attorneys that have gone out and caused disruption in the local community by filing class action suits, and raising cain, and getting involved in redistricting activities, and lots of things that are highly political, taking away from the focus of the real need of the poor, which is to provide everyday legal services on a day-to-day basis for needs that they have in all kinds of matters related to rent, and domestic relations, and so on and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, we have an opportunity with this bill to correct some of those deficiencies of the past, to set a framework in the future that we will be able to follow. However, unfortunately, and whatever happens, unless there is a motion to recommit with instructions passed, one area will remain unaddressed, and, therefore, I would submit, without that area getting addressed, without the key amendments being voted on, this bill will have to be defeated. The Legal Services Corporation Act, the President said, the authorization bill out here today in its present form, he will veto. There will be amendments today that we will call for votes on simply because we want to see the opportunity for those amendments to be heard and thought about by the Members.

The most important failure that is in this bill that we do not have a chance to remedy, except by that motion to recommit, is in the area of monitored. The current Legal Services Corporation sends its inspector general out, and gets paperwork from the individual grantees, and looks at almost anything it wants to; that is, except those things that have attorney-client privilege. We do not think though, under the kind of restrictions that are in the bill before us today, that that is going to be possible in the future.

The bill would require regulations to be promulgated that will be very time sensitive, and in the meantime, while those regulations on monitoring are being promulgated, all monitoring will be suspended. During the interval there could be chaos in the system, but beyond that fact there is no need for regulations in the first place. There has been no complaint that they are doing a bad job of monitoring or that somebody's privileges are being abused.

And in addition to that, this bill would provide that the ethics and individual rules of law of every State that every State bar has, every supreme court of every State applies to the access of these documents to be monitored by the Legal Services national board, and that does not make sense, to have 50 different State rules apply.

We are not going to be able to see the corporation get at the records they need to get at, and we have no ability, because the Committee on Rules did not grant it, to get an amendment to change that, and, unless these areas get changed to allow the Legal Services to monitor the Federal funds that are out there, then we should vote against this bill, and the President has said he will veto it, and I believe he will.

However, in the meantime we have a chance to do some constructive things. There are amendments that will be coming down that several of us will be offering today that are critical to improving the services, to efficiency, to accountability, to fairness. One of those is to put competition in the grant awards into the system. Right now all grantees, these nonprofits around the country, are presumptively re-funded. If another group wants to come forward and seek to get the funds, they cannot do that as a practical matter, and what we seek to do is to simply put into law what this Congress has sanctioned and supported in all appropriations bills since 1988, and that is to set up an implementation of a competitive bid system that would be phased in over a 3-year period after a 2-year test. The Legal Services Corporation would base this on high quality, economical, and effective legal assistance, not the cheapest program, but the most effective program.

We do not need to study it anymore. That is what is in the bill, and I urge adoption of amendment to allow the implementation of this to go forward.

We also need to close loopholes on the non-Federal funds being used to circumvent all the restrictions we have currently in the law. Right now there are a number of restrictions. We will have more today on lobbying. We will have a big debate over that, I am sure, over what the jurisdictions will actually be, but today, unless we pass an amendment in this bill that I am going to offer, we will not be able to see the restrictions that we have actually effectuated because Legal Services may now use non-Federal funds donated by bar associations or local governments to do anything that we say they cannot do.

They can circumvent completely the restrictions of Congress, and, as long as the Congress is the one that is passing the laws, and it is the Federal program, and that is what Legal Services is, it is a Federal program, we Congress men and women are held accountable for what goes on. We expect our auditing trail to be accountable for all of this and be able to know what is going on out there. The public expects that of us, and, if we pass restrictions saying they cannot do X, Y and Z, we do not want them in those areas, then why should we allow them our hat, the Federal hat, to go out and use non-Federal money and do that? They want to do these things, let the other sources of money find other organizational structures to do it and not use the Federal imprimatur and color of doing it.

We also have the lobbying question itself. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to offer an amendment that will go far more than this bill does or than the gentleman from Massachusetts does to completely bar lobbying by these folks, these attorneys. Get them out of the political arena. Get them away from issues like abortion. Get them away from redistricting, which the gentleman from Texas will do totally.

There will be lots of opportunities to get politics out of the system, to focus and refocus the direction of Legal Services to the everyday legal problems of the poor, to build more confidence in the system, and to put competition in there so that we can get accountability and get a respect for it. There will be an opportunity in the agriculture and other areas to have their problems and concerns addressed by allowing disclosure of the names of those who are plaintiffs in these class action suits so the defendants can go out and find out if the cases are truly cases against them, or they may be made up in some way, as many times they suspect.

There is a lot of opportunity to put fairness, accountability, and efficiency, and take the politics out through amendments today, and I urge the Members to support most of the amendments being offered today. Do not be fooled by the substitutes. Go for the gold, go for the bottom line, go to the basic fundamentals. There are a lot of good amendments being offered today, but the bottom line is that we do not have the chance to offer one of the best ones, and, if we cannot offer one to clean up these monitoring restrictions that are placed in the bill, I would not recommend voting for this bill, and I would recommend the President veto it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself half a minute to say that I am then going to yield very shortly to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], who has done an outstanding job on this bill. It is a complicated bill, but we have worked it out. We have a few amendments, some of them good, some of them bad. We have worked with all of the parties I think we have a good bill, and we ought to recognize the outstanding work that has been done in this effort.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], chairman of the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] for his very, very kind words and for his leadership. I also want to thank the ranking minority member. I have no disagreement with the way he describes the situation. We were able in subcommittee and committee I think with the ranking member of the subcommittee and then with the ranking member of the full committee substantially to narrow our differences. But it would not have been appropriate to have abolished them altogether. There are issues that ought to be decided by the full membership. The House has a right to make certain basic ones.

We have I think done our job as a committee. I would have written the rule a little differently if I was writing it, but I do believe with the inclusion of the motion to recommit, we will have every major issue presented. Not in the ideal form, I appreciate that.

I would also note that there are, as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] pointed out, a number of other issues which will be voted on in amendments and with substitutes.

What I want to do here is just make two points. First, the issue of abortion is a very difficult and troubling one. I want to make that clear to Members, because I think Members have two sets of concerns here. Members have their concerns about abortion. They also have other concerns about the way in which the legal services system functions.

I believe we have a rule which, by putting in order an amendment by my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], would substantially reduce abortion-related activity, whether it was pro or anti, as the gentleman has noted, by the Legal Services Corporation. The gentleman gives Members a chance to focus in his amendment on that abortion issue.

I believe in the other amendments we will have a chance to focus on questions of how the Legal Services Corporation ought to be functioning. But I do want to say to Members, we do have an amendment that will be coming up later in the process in which there will be a "yes" or "no" vote on the extent to which Legal Services ought to be litigating in the abortion area.

The second thing I want to note is that we will debate other issues. Part of the problem with the process is that debate inevitably tends to focus on areas of disagreement, and we have some. But I would not want to lead people to overlook the areas of agreement we have achieved.

For instance, one debate we had in the past was should it be a criminal Federal violation if someone steals funds of the Legal Services Corporation. There was ambiguity in that. It was not clear. The U.S. attorneys were not clear.

This bill unambiguously makes it a Federal criminal violation if you steal Legal Services funds.

We have put in provisions which severely restrict redistricting. They may be restricted further.

We have provisions in here which institute for the first time legitimate requirements of timekeeping and recordkeeping, so where there are different funding sources, different issues Legal Services can work on, we avoid the problem of cross-subsidy.

We have an amendment that is going to be offered, on which I have worked with the chairman of the full committee and the ranking member of the Committee on Government Operations who are experts on the inspector general. I believe we will have a very strong inspector general in this bill in an area that is not controversial.

We will be dealing with the right, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] pointed out, of people unfairly sued to recover fees.

I would say parenthetically that a lot of the problems that have arisen in the past came from two places, the left wing and the right wing. We had grantees who were not prepared to live by the rules and board members appointed who were not prepared to live by the rules. I think we have made substantial improvements in both areas and that this bill takes it a step further.

Mr. Chairman, finally I want to note that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] who spoke earlier has spoken to me and has made clear his concern, particularly in the agricultural area, about the need not simply to legislate, but to followup those legislative provisions with very serious oversight. I want to acknowledge that I have committed that to the extent I have any say over that, we will have that.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to our debating those issues that are remaining between us. I did want to note first that abortion will be presented for people who asked about that in a very clear-cut way, and, second, there are going to be a number of areas that you will hear debated where we have acted, for instance in requiring that there be criminal penalties for misuse, that will, in fact, improve the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I once again thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], the chairman of the full committee, for his leadership and assistance and guidance in this matter.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the comments made a few minutes ago by my good friend from Texas, Chairman BROOKS regarding the LSC inspector general.

I initially had a number of concerns about the potential impact H.R. 2039 might have on the operations of the inspector general. I brought my concerns to the attention of Chairman BROOKS, and he immediately responded and worked with me in an effort to address those issues.

The development, introduction, and enactment of the Inspector General Act of 1978 was one of the most significant steps ever taken by Congress to control spending, cut waste, and eliminate fraud. The enactment of the IG Act amendments of 1988 built upon the 1978 act by establishing inspectors general at 32 designated Federal entities. I am proud to have been a coauthor with JACK BROOKS of that legislation and I am proud of the work the inspectors general have done in serving as independent watchdogs.

I remain committed to the inspectors general concept and am pleased that Chairman BROOKS, Mr. FRANK, and others on the Judiciary Committee have been willing to help ensure that the LSC inspector general is not inappropriately constrained in his ability to perform his duties.

I fully support amendment 7 offered as part of the en bloc amendment introduced by Chairman BROOKS, and applaud the leadership shown by Chairman BROOKS in addressing this issue.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the amendment proposed by my colleague, Representative BYRON. In lieu of her amendment, I urge this body to support the provisions of the committee bill, with the addition of the amendment proposed by Mr. FRANK.

Both of these amendments address the issue raised by critics of legal services advocates who represent migrant farmworkers against agricultural interests. Those critics claim that they are subject to spurious suits brought by legal services lawyers on behalf of farmworkers who either do not exist or who never worked for the defendants. I have heard these allegations on many occasions, but I have never seen any evidence whatsoever to suggest that there is any truth to them.

I do, however, understand that legal services attorneys are effective and successful advocates on behalf of migrant farmworkers who are among the most exploited and least protected workers in this country. I believe that the Byron amendment is just one more effort by the agricultural community to thwart the efforts of legal services attorneys to enforce the rights of farmworkers under the Agricultural Workers Protection Act and other statutes enacted to give these workers some modicum of protection against exploitation and deprivation.

Mr. FRANK'S amendment would restate the presumption that exists in our courts that plaintiffs in litigation would reveal their identities, so that defendants can adequately respond to the allegations against them. I believe that such a presumption is fundamentally fair. But I also believe that there are situations where plaintiffs should be permitted by a court to bring John Doe complaints. For example, numerous courts have found that farmworkers have been subject to harassment, blacklisting, retaliation, and discrimination when they pursued their legal rights against agricultural employers. When such circumstances exist where farmworkers have legitimate fears of harassment or retaliation or where the personal safety or that of their families would be compromised by revelation of their identities, they may well need to precede without revealing their identities.

Mrs. BYRON'S amendment would go much further than would Mr. FRANK. She would involve the courts at the precomplaint stage, when the issues are much more appropriately resolved by the parties themselves. She would waste the court's resources on a matter that would never even be before the court if the parties were able to resolve their differences. She would permit client identity to be protected from disclosure to the defendant only after the court held a hearing and issued a formal injunction which was found to be necessary to prevent serious harm to the potential plaintiff.

Even if the court did issue such an injunction, it would not fully protect the plaintiff's identity from disclosure. The court still would be obligated to disclose the plaintiff's identity to the defendant's attorney. If the attorney disclosed the identity to anyone except his own investigators or paralegals, he would be subject to contempt of court. This is an unprecedented requirement—it would obligate the court to reveal information that it has already determined should be protected. It would force the defendant's attorney into an impossible conflict of interest between his own desire to be free of punishment for contempt and his obligation to fully represent his client. Even If the attorney did not directly disclose the plaintiff's identity to his client, there is nothing to ensure that the attorney would not use the information to the detriment of the plaintiff. And all this takes place before there is even a lawsuit filed.

This amendment is simply one more example of the lengths that opponents of legal services will go to erect barriers to effective representation of poor people. We should not be party to efforts to single out the poor and their attorneys for additional burdens that are not shouldered by any other litigants in our society. And we should certainly not require the courts to intervene in private disputes long before a complaint is filed.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2039, the Legal Services Corporation Authorization Act.

For nearly 20 years, the Legal Services Corporation [LSC] has been invaluable in providing legal representation and advice to Americans who do not otherwise have the means to afford a private attorney. Recent events in Los Angeles have served to highlight the tremendous disenfranchisement felt by many low-income Americans who believe the legal system does not and cannot work on their behalf. In fact, it has long been evident that, often times, the law is only as fair as your wallet is thick.

It is that very fact, or perception thereof, which the Legal Services Corporation seeks to combat. By providing funds to local legal aid programs, the Legal Services Corporation assures that those low-income Americans, who need legal counsel in civil matters, will receive it. These moneys are not used to defend criminals and, to the greatest extent possible, are to be used in a nonpartisan and nonpolitical manner.

Some of my colleagues, however, want to inject their own rightwing agenda into the debate by offering mischievous amendments in an attempt to limit some of the important work performed by the Legal Services Corporation on behalf of the Nation's poor, and I want to just highlight a few of these amendments.

One such amendment would prohibit any group receiving Legal Services funding from representing women in abortion-related cases. This is, however, simply another backdoor attempt by the administration to prevent women from learning about their legal reproductive rights. Mr. Chairman, the Congress has already voted down the title X gag rule and I urge my colleagues to do the same with this attempt at gagging LSC attorneys.

Another amendment seeks to curtail Legal Services Corporation funds from being used for local redistricting activities. However, it is often only through the assistance of Legal Services attorneys that minorities and the poor can gain appropriate representation in local governing bodies. This is not meant to help or hinder either political party, Mr. Chairman, but to simply again assure that low-income Americans have the same opportunities to participate in the decisionmaking process as wealthier Americans have. Again, I urge my colleagues to reject these restrictions on local redistricting counseling.

Finally, some would like to further restrict the LSC from lobbying Government bodies on behalf of the poor. As we all know, however, the legal process does not simply take place within the courtroom, but is a continuous process between all three branches of Government. While wealthy Americans can afford high-priced attorneys to do their bidding, the poor can neither afford proper representation, nor can they gain access to appropriate channels for legislative or regulatory action. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the Reagan administration took great pride in dismantling the Community Services Administration which was an effective avenue through which needs of the poor could be advocated. Now this Bush administration wants to eliminate this last bastion of advocacy for our Nation's poor. Let us in this House not close and lock the door on the right of all Americans to petition their Government for action and let us vote down this unjust amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have all become aware in recent days of the tragic consequences when one group in society believes that the institutions of Government are working against them rather than for them. The Legal Services Corporation seeks to assure that all Americans receive proper legal counseling and representation and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2039 and to strike down the amendments which would further erode our democratic system.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2039, the Legal Services Corporation authorization. Although this program has not been properly authorized for 12 years, Legal Services Corporation [LSC] attorneys have provided a tremendous service to this country by protecting the rights of the most vulnerable in our society. As with even the best of programs, a few problems have arisen, and H.R. 2039 addresses these issues in a fair, balanced manner.

I would like to commend my colleagues, Mr. BROOKS, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and Mr. FRANK, chairman of the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, for their work in crafting this legislation. For poorer Americans, the access to the legal system provided by the Legal Services Corporation is essential to protect their rights and to ensure that they are not victimized simply because they lack financial resources.

The bill as approved by the House Judiciary Committee, with a few correcting amendments to be offered by Mr. BROOKS, makes several important changes in the current Legal Services guidelines. In addition to the current restrictions on the use of Federal LSC funds, the bill restricts what activities LSC attorneys can pursue with private funds, including bans on political activities and representing persons convicted of drug crimes in drug-related housing eviction proceedings.

The bill bans the use of Federal funds to represent illegal aliens and permits defendants to win attorney's fees from the LSC if an LSC plaintiff's suit is found to be "frivolous," to be intended to harass or retaliate against the defendant, or to maliciously abuse the legal process.

The bill also provides for a study on whether competitive bidding should be used to select LSC grantees. While this study may lead to future savings, we must be careful that we do not head toward a day when the rich receive the best legal representation money can buy while the poor receive the cheapest, regardless of quality.

Given the long hours and low pay that are standard for most Legal Services attorneys, I find it hard to believe that similar quality representation can be found at a significant savings. Competitive bidding should be carefully examined before it is considered, and it would be a mistake to adopt a competitive bidding amendment before the study has been completed and thoroughly reviewed.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2039 is a good bill, one that addresses the legitimate concerns brought to the Judiciary Committee's attention and strikes a proper balance between ensuring access to the legal system and limiting LSC activities to protect defendants from meritless litigation. We need to move forward with this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I am in strong support of H.R. 2039, the Legal Services Corporation authorization for fiscal years 1992–96.

For close to 20 years the Legal Services Corporation has provided essential legal services and representation to those persons financially unable to afford them. During this time it has served an extraordinarily broad array of American society; the elderly, the inner city poor, migrant farm workers and many others, who sadly, do not have the resources to obtain essential legal services. Without the legal representation provided by the local LSC supported agencies there are many people in our society who would be effectively locked out of the country's legal system.

Founded in 1974, the Legal Services Corporation was last authorized by Congress for the 3-year period 1977–80. For the last dozen years it has been forced to survive, due in large part to administration opposition, on year to year funding through Commerce-Justice-State Appropriations Acts. We have the opportunity today to provide long-term stability to the program.

The foundation of this country's freedoms are the liberties guaranteed us by the Constitution. If, however, all Americans are not granted equal access to these laws, then the cause of equality, for which these laws were established, is undermined. Tragically, there are many people in our country who are locked out of our legal system. Because of limited financial resources many are unable to gain access to the legal counsel necessary to work through a complicated and difficult legal system that has become impossible to navigate without professional assistance. This bill supports the means by which the poor and financially disadvantaged can obtain the legal assistance and protection that should be guaranteed to all Americans.

The law is not the domain of the rich, access to it is the right of all Americans. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation which keeps the doors to the American legal system open to all citizens.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). All time for general debate has expired.

(a) ENFORCEMENT.—Section 1006(b)(1)(A) (42 U.S.C. 2996e(b)(1)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1)(A)(i) The Corporation shall have the authority to ensure the compliance of recipients, other grantees and contractors of the Corporation, and their respective employees with the provisions of this title. The Corporation may issue rules, regulations, guidelines, and instructions to interpret the provisions of this title, but may not impose, by regulation or otherwise, restrictions or limitations on types of cases or forms of representation of clients unless such restrictions or limitations are explicitly authorized by this title or other applicable law, and may not impose, by regulation or otherwise, restrictions or requirements on such recipients, grantees, or contractors that are in addition to or inconsistent with the provisions of this title and other applicable law.

"(ii) The Corporation shall have the authority to enforce the rules, regulations, guidelines, and instructions issued under this title, and to terminate, in accordance with the standards described in paragraph (5) of this subsection, financial support to a recipient or other grantee or contractor of the Corporation. Pursuant to regulations adopted by the Corporation under section 1008(e), the Corporation shall—

"(I) arrange for independent evaluations to determine whether recipients and other grantees and contractors of the Corporation are providing comprehensive, economical, and effective legal assistance of high quality to eligible clients, and

"(II) conduct reasonable monitoring and investigations into allegations that a recipient or other grantee or contractor has violated this title, the rules, regulations, guidelines, or instructions issued under this title, or other laws.

Such notification shall specify the case, event, or circumstances involved and those provisions of this title, the rules, regulations, guidelines, or instructions, or other laws that are alleged to have been violated. The Corporation may suspend, reduce, or terminate financial assistance under this title, or deny an application for refunding under this title—

"(i) when there has been a substantial failure to comply with the provisions of this title, or rules, regulations, guidelines, or instructions issued under this title, or of other laws, and after notice and an opportunity to correct such failure has been provided to the recipient, grantee, or contractor involved; or

"(ii) when independent evaluations demonstrate that a recipient or other grantee or contractor has consistently failed to use its resources to provide economical and effective legal assistance of high quality as measured by generally accepted professional standards, and after notice and an opportunity to correct such failure has been provided to such recipient, grantee, or contractor.

The Corporation may deny an application for refunding of a recipient or other grantee or contractor when the Corporation has identified an applicant for financial assistance under this title that is better able to provide high quality, comprehensive, economical, and effective legal assistance for the geographic area served by such recipient, grantee, or contractor, consistent with the provisions of sections 1007(a)(2) and 1007(c) of this title.

"(B) Financial assistance under this title may not be terminated or suspended, an application for refunding under this title may not be denied, and the annual level of financial assistance under this title may not be reduced by more than 5 percent or $20,000, whichever is less, unless the recipient or other grantee or contractor involved has been afforded reasonable notice and, at the request of the recipient, grantee, or contractor, a timely and fair hearing before an independent hearing examiner pursuant to regulations issued by the Corporation. Such regulations shall provide for commencement of the hearing before an independent hearing examiner at the earliest appropriate date, but in no case more than 45 days after a request for such a hearing is received. As soon as practical after the hearing, but in no case more than 60 days after its conclusion, the independent hearing examiner shall make a recommended decision on the matter involved. A copy of the recommended decision shall be sent to the Corporation and the recipient, grantee, or contractor involved. If neither the Corporation nor the recipient, grantee, or contractor involved requests review by the president of the Corporation of that recommended decision within 10 days after the date the recipient, grantee, or contractor receives a copy of the decision, that decision shall become final. Within 30 days after receipt of a request for a review of a recommended decision, the president of the Corporation shall make a final decision with respect to that recommended decision. In addition to other remedies provided by law, the recipient, grantee, or contractor may appeal the final decision to the Board.".

"(d)(1) The Corporation shall monitor recipients and other grantees and contractors of the Corporation in order to ensure that the provisions of this title, the rules, regulations, guidelines, and instructions issued under this title, and other laws are carried out by such recipients, grantees, and contractors, and shall provide for independent evaluations to determine whether such recipients, grantees, and contractors are providing economical and effective legal assistance of high quality to eligible clients. The Corporation shall adopt standards and procedures to implement the provisions of section 1006(b)(1)(A) and this subsection as regulations under section 1008(e).

"(2) The standards and procedures adopted under paragraph (1) shall take into account—

"(A) that the responsibility of the Corporation with regard to monitoring and evaluation is to ensure compliance with this title, the rules, regulations, guidelines, and instructions issued under this title, and any other laws and to provide for independent evaluations to assess the extent to which the overall delivery of legal assistance by a recipient or other grantee or contractor is economical, effective, and of high quality and not to manage the day-to-day operations of recipients and other grantees and contractors;

"(B) that each recipient or other grantee or contractor has the responsibility to manage its day-to-day operations and to assure that its employees comply with all applicable law and deliver high quality legal assistance in an effective and economical manner;

"(C) the requirements of section 552a of title 5, United States Code, the privacy protections of State law, and the principle that matters and records that are personal or private and that relate to an individual employee should be protected from examination by the Corporation, and

"(D) the rules of ethics and professional responsibility that are applicable in the jurisdiction where a recipient or other grantee or contractor delivers legal assistance.

The Corporation may not require disclosure of records described in subparagraph (C) except to the extent such records can be expected to contain information directly pertinent and necessary to an investigation of a likely pattern of discrimination, lack of compliance with the law, or poor performance by a recipient or other grantee or contractor which is indicated by other external evidence.

"(3) The Corporation shall ensure that the monitoring process is fair and conducted in a manner that does not cause more than necessary disruption to the provision of legal services provided by the recipient or other grantee or contractor being monitored, and provides—

"(A) sufficient notice before monitoring is conducted;

"(B) flexibility to negotiate with the Corporation when disagreements arise over the timing and conduct of monitoring;

"(C) reasonable opportunity to respond and comment on draft reports on monitoring;

"(D) protection from disclosure to third parties of the results of monitoring and the contents of any draft reports on monitoring before a final report on the monitoring is issued; and

"(E) protection from disclosure to third parties of any documents obtained during monitoring except to the extent necessary to carry out the monitoring, consistent with the laws and the rules of ethics and professional responsibility applicable to the jurisdiction where such documents are maintained, except that the Corporation shall at all times have the authority to make evidence of criminal conduct available to the appropriate legal authority.

The Corporation shall ensure that the monitoring process is reasonably related to the purposes which the monitoring is intended to accomplish.

"(4) The Corporation, in cooperation with recipients and other appropriate groups, shall develop criteria for evaluating the capability and performance of recipients and other grantees and contractors of the Corporation. Such criteria shall provide for the assessment of—

"(A) the degree to which any such recipient, grantee, or contractor provides a comprehensive range of legal assistance to eligible clients, including, in the case of support entities, a comprehensive range of appropriate support services;

"(B) the past demonstrated record of any such recipient, grantee, or contractor in providing effective, economical, and high quality legal services to poor individuals and in developing additional resources, including pro bono services from the private bar;

"(C) the ability of any such recipient, grantee, or contractor to determine and address the needs of eligible clients for particular services, including, in the case of support entities, the range of support services needed in the geographical or subject matter area served;

"(iii) before filing such an action, the project director of the recipient, grantee, or contractor determines that the government entity is not likely to change the policy or practice in question, that the policy or practice will continue to adversely affect eligible clients, that the recipient, grantee, or contractor has given notice of its intention to seek class relief, and that responsible efforts to resolve without litigation the adverse effects of the policy or practice have not been successful or would be adverse to the interest of the clients.".

"(ii) at least 60 percent of which consists of attorneys who are members of the bar of a State in which the legal assistance is to be provided (except that the Corporation may grant, pursuant to regulations issued by the Corporation, a waiver of the requirements of this clause for recipients which, because of the nature of the population they serve, are unable to comply with such requirement); and

"(iii) at least one-third of which consists of persons who are, when selected, eligible clients who may also be representatives of associations or organizations of eligible clients; and

"(B) any other recipient, grantee, or contractor of the Corporation is governed by a body that meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) or has established a policy body, whose membership is selected consistent with such requirements, to establish policy with respect to the administration of any grant or contract under this title.

"(B) comply with the legal and ethical requirements on conflicts of interest that apply in the jurisdiction where the recipient, grantee, or contractor is located;

"(C) not act on a case-by-case basis in setting priorities, except that the governing or policy body may reconsider priorities at any time for future applications for services in light of changing legal needs of clients or in light of an emergency; and

"(B) take into account locally determined needs for particular kinds of cases or services,

"(C) take into account the ongoing ethical and professional responsibilities of recipients, other grantees or contractors of the Corporation, and their attorneys for existing cases, the potential disruption in client services, and loss of experienced staff, pro bono services, funds from sources other than the Corporation, and other resources if an existing recipient or other grantee or contractor were replaced,

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, of the many amendments filed on H.R. 2039 and in order on the floor today, there are a number by Chairman FRANK that I believe are noncontroversial. As we have a lot of work ahead of us, I am now offering those amendments en bloc to help speed up our evaluation on the other amendments.

Concern has been expressed that the bill's present section 6(c)—which deals with monitoring—might impact the work of the Legal Services Corporation's inspector general in some way. This was never intended, and amendment No. 7 ensures that there is absolutely no impact on the inspector general from section 6(c) of this bill.

During my tenure as chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations, I had the distinct honor and pleasure of working closely with our distinguished colleague, Mr. FRANK HORTON of New York—was then, and is now, the ranking minority member. Together, we developed and introduced the Inspector General Act of 1978.

Based on our years of experience with the Inspector General Act at the Government Operations Committee, Mr. HORTON, the ranking minority member of the committee, and I together worked out amendment No. 7. He and I are in complete agreement that this amendment is consistent with the Inspector General Act, and that it fully addresses any legitimate concerns raised by the inspector general of the Legal Services Corporation with regard to section 6(c).

On another issue, amendment No. 12 addresses another concern of our colleague from Florida, Mr. McCOLLUM. A provision in current law which prohibits the commingling of Legal Services Corporation funds and non-LSC funds was inadvertently dropped by a Republican amendment offered during the Judiciary Committee's markup of H.R. 2039. Amendment No. 12 completely restores the requirement in current law that non-Legal Services Corporation funds be specifically "accounted for and reported as receipts and disbursements separate and distinct from Federal funds."

Amendment No. 9 dealing with the definition of staff attorney and No. 13 dealing with the appointment of members to governing bodies also resolve concerns raised by our colleague from Florida, Mr. McCOLLUM. The other amendments are technical, and I urge our colleagues to support this en bloc amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that the chairman of the full Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], is representing that these noncontroversial amendments have been cleared by the minority side. If that be so, I just want to let the gentleman know that I personally did not assent to them.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that they had been cleared by the minority. I am proposing that we consider them en bloc because of my conviction that they either answer minority concerns in the bill or are technical, and that they have been given to Members to evaluate. I do not say that the gentleman has read them and cleared them. I want the gentleman to read them and look at them. I have no problems with them.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would say in some cases amendments that the committee or subcommittee offered were in conflict with the members of the minority. In all those cases they stayed out of the en bloc, to my understanding. That is, where there were different ways of doing things as between us, those will be debated on the floor.

My understanding was that these were all areas where we had frankly agreed, during committee debate, to accommodate some of the concerns that had been raised to further tighten up some provisions. And these were relatively noncontroversial ways of doing this.

There were, with regard to inspector general, some different approaches, but as the chairman had said, we worked this one out with the approval of the ranking minority member of the Committee on Government Operations, who we frankly had felt to be one of the great experts on inspector general, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON].

But that is the genesis of these. These were areas where we made commitments in committee debate to go a couple of steps further and where, as we looked at the list of amendments, there were no competing ways of doing it.

Where there were competing ways of doing it, with regard to privacy of names or attorney fees, we got them out of the en bloc. And we will be offering them as specific substitutes to competing ways of doing this.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I do not question any of the representations made by either the chairman of the full committee or the chairman of the subcommittee. I simply want to make sure that we are going to be finally adopting the same kind of language, if we agree to these.

I would suggest, before yielding to the gentleman from Florida to see if he would concur, that we pose some questions to the chairman on what he has presented to us here. And then afterwards, I may want to request, perhaps by agreement, that we postpone the final vote on this amendment, perhaps to the end of the process, if that can be done parliamentarily, without any great harm.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Those that I have been able to look at here do not look like they are egregious or bad. They are fairly noncontroversial.

I would say, with regard to the amendment with regard to the inspector general, it is a fine amendment, nothing wrong with it at all. It does embrace what I believe was an agreed-upon understanding with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON].

I would point out that it does not go as far as this Member and others would like, which was why the debate on the rules and opening here about how we did not get to go to our monitoring, because there still would be restrictions on what could be seen based upon State and local bar rules that are now being adopted in the bill.

So there are still problems. The amendment itself that is being offered is not a problem.

I would like to ask a couple questions, if I could. One of them, if I could ask, has to do with the very first one, the so-called No. 3, originally dealing with the outreach programs.

The gentleman from Massachusetts crafted one to apparently, if I read this right, allow any organization to conduct an outreach program, not just the Legal Services grantees and not just the recipients or whatever.

The language looks like recipient, grantee, or contractor, or other organization.

Would the gentleman explain what he has in mind with that?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman repeat the question?

Mr. McCOLLUM. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I am curious, there was a slip that went out originally saying that the people who would be able to do outreach programs would include church organizations, but I read this as any organization.

In other words, it would not just be a grantee, just a recipient of money, but it would be, it could be any. I do not know what the gentleman has in mind by that, whether it is the local Kiwanis Club or who is going to be conducting the outreach programs under the proposal of this amendment.

I just want clarification.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I would say to the gentleman, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS] had been approached by people who wanted to make these grants. And what we decided was that if someone wanted to make the grant available, we would accept it as long as it did not transgress any specific prohibition.

And what we were told was that we might, if we tried to write too specific a definition, we would be perhaps inadvertently excluding someone to which no one had an objection.

We did want to make it clear that nothing in here overrides any specific prohibitions to the contrary.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, then my understanding is correct that any organization could conduct the outreach.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, that is correct.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, maybe we will want to work toward perfecting that because that is pretty broad.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would say this, at the conference stage, if we reach that, if we do not it is not relevant, I would be delighted to work to narrow that if they thought that was a reasonable thing.

I would ask that we include the gentleman from West Virginia.

There is one other question I wanted to ask. On No. 10, No. 10 has to do with the question regarding the Corporation's due process on firing employees. There is some representation we have seen out in some of the paperwork that this is nothing more than codifying existing rights.

My understanding is that presently the Corporation is not a Federal agency and, therefore, Federal personnel policies do not apply and that the due process procedures we are setting up here are new.

Am I correct, they are completely new? They do not exist presently?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, my understanding is that this provision is in the current law that governs Legal Services and that it was just inadvertently dropped out.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, if that is true for us, we do not have a problem with it. But our research over here indicated that right now DC laws were applicable and after this law it no longer would be the DC laws that applied to this area.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, our intention was simply, if the gentleman has the pamphlet, the Legal Service Corporation Act, as amended 1977, it was section 1006(b) under rules and regulations, we were simply trying to reincorporate that which had been in an editing error dropped out.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Would the gentleman and the chairman consider removing that one amendment from the en bloc so we could take a look at it and study that?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed by counsel that this section 10 would restore the current law. The current law in Legal Services provided for this. It was left out inadvertently when we rewrote the law.

If we do not put that in, it is not going to be part of the Legal Services operation at all. That is what it is.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I understand the gentleman.

I just want to comment that I believe the gentleman's counsel is giving credible advice to us. If that is the intent, I have no objection to it.

But our reading of it was that it went further than that. I guess the best I can say is that if it is not going to be separated out for further looking at, then we will look at it with the gentleman and maybe if we go into a situation where we have a conference on it, we can straighten it out, if it is a problem.

What the gentleman is stating is not a problem for us, if that is, indeed, the way it really reads.

I do not think there are any other amendments I have a problem with except to comment that the commingling of funds amendment, straightening that out does not resolve my problems over the non-Federal funds. I do not think they ought to be used for going around the restrictions.

We will have an amendment to discuss that later on.

I think the gentleman has done a good thing by squaring away the fact that we do not want to commingle our funds, and I do support that.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, we take these things one step at a time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, these outreach programs that we are going to give to everybody in sight now, what are they?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will take the explanation that I have, which is very hazy at this moment, that this is still to be restricted and that the general prohibitions that we have for other kinds of activities, such as church-related and others, would still be the law.

This one would allow that simple extension, and it is very hazy to me.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, does this mean that, for instance in farming communities, that we could have a lot of these groups now deciding that they were going to become involved in migrant worker types of questions and thereby stir up the community in order to get Legal Services lawyers on the backs of local farmers and so on?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I must say to the gentleman that when the chairman of the full committee began to explain these provisions, then the further statements made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I began to see a gigantic loophole opening up to allow all kinds of pressure groups to become involved.

Mr. WALKER. So we could literally form an organization that would then become an outreach organization under this that would then have the ability to influence decisionmaking?

Mr. GEKAS. Presumably so, I would have to say to the gentleman.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendments were put en bloc. Each of the amendments was assigned an amount of time. It seems to me that the time, then, was reduced considerably by putting them en bloc. Can we not have debate time equaling the amount of time of the amendments that were included in the en bloc amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendments offered en bloc by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who holds that option, are debatable for 20 minutes, equally divided.

Mr. WALKER. And further inquiring, Mr. Chairman, this side has now used its 10 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has used the 10 minutes allotted to him.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, could I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] some of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may certainly do that.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] yields 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania may control that time.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, as the matter stands now, I am so, how shall I say, puzzled by the possibilities of mischief in this amendment that I am constrained to urge my colleagues to vote against it. Even though it started out as an en bloc amendment that seemed to satisfy both sides, I am not satisfied, I must say.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give us an idea of what the outreach activities include?

Mr. GEKAS. I cannot.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] again to reiterate his definition of outreach.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, what we have, the problem is that we want to be clear that Legal Services should not engage in solicitation of clients. They are allowed under this to work with organizations that approach them. I am told that the specific reason that the word "legal assistance" was stricken was concern that church groups would thereby be excluded. This is one of the areas we were told where Legal Services people are approached by church groups that say, "We have been hearing about this problem."

The way it works is that other groups would set up a meeting, invite a Legal Services lawyer, it would have to be another organization, they would set up a meeting and invite a Legal Services lawyer and say, "These people are concerned about rents, these people are concerned about what they think might be an environmental problem," et cetera, "and we would like you to explain to them what their rights are and then see if any of them would want to be legally represented."

The original word said if it was a legal assistance organization the concern was that this might ban church groups. That is as I understand it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. That explanation then becomes very worrisome, because it sounds to me what they could literally do is set up advocacy groups that would then take on these issues.

Mr. GEKAS. Yes.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would yield further, if the gentleman would allow me to put the words "legal assistance" back in.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman what this means.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, maybe it is because I am befuddled, but I cannot envision anything but the possibilities of mischief here, unintended, but to create another loophole where we on this side have been trying valiantly for many years to close loopholes.

I would have to urge my colleagues to vote against this, unless the gentleman would entertain withdrawing the amendment for now. If the gentleman will withdraw the amendment en bloc for now and allow our staffs to brief each other on it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. Yes, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. If this is a major problem for the gentleman and he needs a little time to consider it, we can do that. We can go over it again with his staff. There is a communication problem with his staff, sometimes, I am afraid, because we have been over all these with my staff backward and forward. I think they told somebody over there.

At any rate, to resolve this and get this thing moving, I would ask unanimous consent that that amendment be withdrawn from the en bloc amendments and considered later as an individual amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Could the gentleman state, by number in the report of the Committee on Rules, which amendment the gentleman makes reference to?

Mr. BROOKS. No. 10.

The CHAIRMAN. No. 10?

Mr. BROOKS. No. 10, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GEKAS. No. 1, we believe, is it not?

Mr. BROOKS. No. No. 1, pardon me. No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will suspend for just a moment.

Mr. BROOKS. Pardon me, Mr. Chairman. Let me restate that. Under the rule the amendment that we are asking to be postponed and reconsidered later is No. 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendment No. 1.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, just to assure ourselves this amendment No. 1 referred to is the amendment which allows outreach activities to be supported by church groups and, as we have now found out, all organizations, is that the Chair's understanding?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposed modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment relating to page 31, line 11, is redacted from the en bloc amendments as originally proposed by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEKAS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has already withdrawn it by unanimous consent, the one amendment. The en bloc amendment resolved, I think, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has no further time.

I will state it again. The unanimous consent request is to withdraw from the en bloc amendments and to consider it later under the rule in the bill with other amendments individually when called up.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time on the en bloc amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 410, noes 3, answered "present" 1, not voting 20, as follows:

Mr. ARMEY and Mr. CRANE changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. ORTIZ changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment en bloc, as modified, were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in House Report 102-512.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

MODIFICATION OF AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified to read that after the words "legal assistance," we add the words "or church."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification of amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS: Page 31, line 11, after the words "legal assistance", all the words "or church".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas to modify the amendment?

Mr. GEKAS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, and I do not intend to object, but I want the chairman to know that we are in accord with the language change, the modification that the committee chairman has offered here. We are not going to object to that.

What we want to try to do is to expand on the rationale on that for a moment, because we anticipate there might be some objection to the amendment, even though we have no opposition to the modification, if the gentleman would understand.

Under the language that the gentleman is adding now, the gentleman is in effect expanding legal assistance simply by putting one other activity in it that is permissible that would be church related. Is that not the purport of the modification?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I believe that is a fair interpretation.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The modification to the amendment is agreed to.

Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] will be recognized for 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I understand that the nature of the modified amendment now is to substantially narrow the number of organizations that might be characterized as providing outreach. However, I am still somewhat disturbed by the language of this amendment.

As I understand it, what we are doing is creating an outreach scenario that first of all in this particular case by adding the word "church" does strike some of us as kind of odd coming from a party who for years has told us that we have to have absolute separation of church and State. Whenever we have discussed school prayer and some of these kinds of issues, it has been suggested that we have to have absolute separation; but of course, when they want to go out and do political activity, using the church as a basis, then they put it into the bill.

Second, I am concerned about the realities of what we are seeing happen in Legal Services. The churches are already being used as a place to bring, for instance, migrant workers in to tell them of their legal rights and tell them how they can take action against the farmer that they work for. It seems to me that if you have some looney left minister who is essentially the pastor of a conservative church that has been having trouble getting his church to go along with some of this kind of activity, he can now point to the law and say, "Oh, the law requires that we do this. Here is carte blanche authority for these kinds of activities."

I will tell you, coming from someone who represents a farming community, I think there is room for untold mischief in this particular amendment. I think it is exactly the kind of thing that we do not want to see happening in the Legal Services framework.

So I would suggest that while the amendment may be narrower than what was originally contemplated, it is in fact an amendment which is unacceptable to those of us who have seen the kinds of problems that have been created by the Legal Services in the agricultural community, and I would suggest that Members may want to vote "no" on this particular amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say publicly about a conversation we had privately, namely, that obviously none of us like to totally legislate on the floor. I would just like to say that if we can work out, and I think we probably can, some further narrowing and further clarification of this, I would be glad to agree to it.

I offered to the minority that we will continue to work on this, and I would be glad to abide by any further suggestions they would have as this bill goes through conference and later on to be even more specific about what we meant.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear that the gentleman from Massachusetts is continuing to be willing to do that. I intend to take the gentleman up on that, because I am not satisfied that we are not, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is saying, creating a new possibility for mischief here.

I, too, am worried about the impact in the agricultural and farming community here, and I have got to sort that out. Pending that, I must vote "no" on this.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to reassure my friend that I am not, and I do not think any of us on this side are in this particular amendment trying to create any new mischief.

I would like to note that outreach now goes on. As I understand it, this would narrow it some, but I would reiterate my agreement to work with the gentleman to further narrow this.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, we want to do that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN of North Carolina changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I was unexpectedly detained with some of my constituents and missed a vote on the amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS of Texas to the Legal Services Reauthorization Act (H.R. 2039), rollcall No. 100. Had I been present, however, I would have voted "no" on the amendment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, during rollcall vote No. 100 on H.R. 2039 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present I would have voted "aye."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 8 printed in House Report 102-512.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. McCOLLUM

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

SEC. 16. PHASED IMPLEMENTATION OF COMPETITION; DISTRIBUTION OF GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.

"(m)(1)(A) Ten percent of all grants and contracts awarded by the Corporation for the provision or support of legal assistance to eligible clients under this title shall be awarded under a competitive bidding system developed by the Corporation to test the use of competition in providing effective and efficient legal services of high quality. This competitive system shall—

"(i) ensure access to high-quality, economical, and effective legal services for eligible clients, consistent with section 1001,

"(ii) minimize disruption of client services, and

"(iii) ensure that every recipient or other grantee or contractor seeking a grant or contract through this competitive bidding process complies with all provisions of this title and the applicable rules, regulations, guidelines, and instructions issued under this title.

"(B) The competitive bidding system developed under subparagraph (A) shall be implemented in fiscal years 1993 and 1994.

"(C) The Corporation shall, not later than 18 months after implementation of the competitive bidding system under subparagraph (A), report to the Congress on the effectiveness of the system.

"(D) If at the end of fiscal year 1994 the Corporation determines that the competitive bidding system has met the requirements of subparagraph (A), the Corporation shall so notify the Congress and shall proceed to phase in, during the next 3 fiscal years, the implementation, for all grants and contracts awarded by the Corporation, of a competitive bidding system that meets the requirements of subparagraph (A).

"(2) Rights under sections 1007(a)(9) and 1006(b)(5) shall not apply to the termination or denial of financial resistance under this title as a result of the competitive award of any grant or contract under paragraph (1), and the expiration of any grant or contract under this title as a result of such competitive award shall not be treated as a termination or denial of refunding under section 1007(a)(9) or 1006(b)(5).

"(n)(1) Funds appropriated to the Corporation shall be distributed to each grantee or contractor on a per capita basis pursuant to the number of poor people determined by the Bureau of the Census to be within its geographical area, in accordance with paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) The amount of the grants from the Corporation and of the contracts entered into by the Corporation under section 1006(a)(1) shall be an equal figure per poor person for all geographic areas, based on the most recent decennial census of population conducted pursuant to section 141 of title 13, United States Code, regardless of the level of funding for any geographic area before the enactment of the Legal Services Reauthorization Act of 1991.

"(3) Beginning with the fiscal year beginning after the results of the most recent decennial census have been reported to the President under section 141(b) of title 13, United States Code, funding of geographic areas served by recipients shall be redetermined, in accordance with paragraph (2), based on the per capita poverty population in each such geographic area under that decennial census.".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is in my judgment one of the more important amendments this body will consider to the Legal Services Corporation bill today. It provides for the implementation of a competitive bid process for the awarding of legal services grants.

Around the country today, the way we dispense the money and the way this program operates is by the Legal Services Corporation Board taking the federally appropriated dollars and awarding grants to various nonprofit organizations in the State and local communities to do the job of providing legal services to the poor.

For quite a number of years, at least 10 or 12 years, there has been presumptive refunding of all of these organizations. As a practical matter that has meant that all of these folks that have an exclusive franchise for a given geographical area to do the work are going to get the Federal money. The Legal Services Board has no real discretion in deciding that they do not get it any more, that maybe if somebody wanted to come forward and provide services, another nonprofit group that would say "We could do that, we would like to have the franchise to do legal services for the poor in this area," they have not been able to grant them that privilege. They have not had a mechanism to do that.

Over the years we have asked them to study that issue and they have studied it quite extensively at the national board level.

Since 1988 our appropriations bills that we have passed without the authorization having been there have contained provisions that have asked for the implementation of this. The only reason that it has not is that there has been a trigger mechanism that said the Board cannot implement it.

The only drawback or restriction was a trigger mechanism in those appropriations bills that said that the Board could not proceed with the implementation of the competitive bid process until such time as a board was confirmed by the Senate. Because of the great dispute through the Reagan era over the existence of Legal Services, for whatever reason it has carried on, even though there is not a controversial board presently. It is a very bipartisan, noncontroversial board.

For whatever reason, the Senate has never confirmed the Board as such and they are operating as Presidential appointees as they have the power to do in the interim. But I think it is certainly appropriate that we take that appropriations lead and put it in the authorization bill. Now after 14 years of not having an authorization bill we are going to do that.

That is really all my amendment does. It provides that a competitive bid process for the grantees will be implemented over a 5-year period, a 2-year test period with 10 percent of the grants going for that purpose, and then a phasein period for 3 years.

At the end of the test of the 10-percent grant period, there must be a report to Congress. Actually the report has to come at the end of 18 months to let us know what they are doing. They have to go ahead and do it.

In the bill right now there is no requirement they go forward. There is just a study. Since it has been so many years since we have had an authorization bill, and who knows when we are going to get another one, the way this thing has gone, it seems to me to make a lot of sense, since this is not controversial, to go ahead and put the final touches on this and make sure we do get a competitive bid process worked out.

The exact form of it is left to the Legal Services Board to describe and work out. But we do give them the guidance in the amendment that they must consider the three basic things of high-quality, economical, and effective legal assistance as the criteria.

This is not a lowest cost bidder scheme. This is not like a defense contract bid scheme. This is designed for them to look at others who might apply for legal assistance franchises on the basis of the highest quality service that they can provide, the most effective service they can provide, not the lowest cost bidder.

Mr. Chairman, if we do put this in, it seems to me we will have a far better system than we have right now. There is no way that anybody can be assured that we are getting better services if we do not have the opportunity for others to come forward and apply.

May I remind my colleagues that under this proposal all the restrictions on the composition of the local boards remain so that they still have to have the 60 percent attorneys and they still have to have the representation of the poor on whatever competitive bid group that comes forward, and the local bar still has control over the majority of the boards and so forth. So whatever other organizations came forward would still have to be out of that same mold. Nobody is making a change there, and there might not be any that come forward in most of the jurisdictions.

What it does is it opens the opportunity. It gives the kinds of flexibility that we need if we are going to have accountability and we are going to have efficiency in the legal services delivery system. It is long overdue.

Again, as I said, my proposal is essentially what has been in every appropriations bill since 1988, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, when companies compete against each other in any given market, it generally results in better products and better prices for consumers. For many years I have encouraged Federal agencies to increase competition in their procurement processes. I am for competition. But, looking for a good lawyer is entirely different from shopping for a television set.

Awarding contracts for professional services is a complicated and difficult process. In the architect and engineering services area, we have an entirely separate law which governs the acquisition process. That law—which took years to develop—takes into account the unique nature of professional services and the needs to be met by them.

Based on my experience in this area, I caution Members that we need to tread carefully in this area of professional services. Past competitive contracting for delivery of criminal defense for the poor was an acknowledged failure. The successful bids came in very low, but over time the quality of presentation deteriorated dramatically; costs rose to a level exceeding that of both public defenders and assigned counsel; and substantial administrative costs were incurred.

No one has questioned the high quality of the work done by these legal services attorneys. Indeed, the complaint heard by the committee is that these lawyers may be doing their work too well to suit some opponents of the program.

We have to be very careful before we take all of legal services and put them out to the lowest bidders. The committee bill requires a study on the feasibility of competitive bidding for legal service grants and a report back to us within 3 years. That study is a positive step which will give us sufficient empirical evidence on which to base future decisions in this area.

I believe the study presently in H.R. 2039 should be retained, and I strongly urge the rejection of this amendment—just as it was rejected in the Judiciary Committee on a bipartisan vote of 23 to 10.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, unlike other Federal grant programs, grantees of the Legal Services Corporation enjoy presumptive refunding simply because a program received a grant to provide legal services 15 to 20 years ago, that program is virtually assured of receiving an annual grant regardless of the program's competence or effectiveness. It is almost impossible to terminate any legal services grantee regardless of the grantee's ineffectiveness or unrefuted evidence that the grantee has violated the Legal Services Corporation Act and its regulations. Even if the corporation is successful in terminating a grantee, the process is lengthy and expensive. Without a doubt, presumptive funding has had a negative impact on the entire program's performance.

Guaranteed funding has adversely affected productivity as well as accountability. Several scholars have documented the impact that a lack of competition has had on the Federal Legal Services Program. For example, in a recent study of the Legal Services Program by the American Enterprise Institute, Douglas Besharov finds that the productivity of legal services programs has declined as much as 20 percent in the last 18 years. He cited the lack of competition as the major cause. In another study, Stephen Cox found that legal services attorneys took longer to service routine cases, and had a higher cost per case compared to private attorneys.

Of course, legal services programs protest the suggestion that legal services programs should be submitted to the ordinary grant-making procedures of competitive bidding. Normally parties which benefit from a monopoly do not welcome competition.

H.R. 2039 would delay progress in carrying through on implementation of competition by requiring a study. Further study is not needed. What is needed is competitive bidding for Federal legal services grants. The McCollum amendment directs the Legal Services Corporation to institute a limited 2-year test, followed by a 3-year phase-in, of a competitive system for awarding legal services grants. Under this system, grantees would compete based on their delivery of high-quality, economical, and effective legal services. The Legal Services Corporation would report to Congress on the program after 18 months. I urge my colleagues to support the McCollum amendment.

I listened very carefully to the chairman's remarks and found myself in much agreement, but by the same token, we have a program that has taken us 10 years to get to the reauthorization process, of which I commend the chairman and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] for the work of the bill.

We have made major progress today, but I do believe that we could, in fact, make this Legal Services Corporation system a much better institution for those that it is intended to serve, the poor of this Nation, by providing competition, by providing that those who have the responsibility of providing that legal services have that opportunity to compete.

I think it would, in fact, make for a better system.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. REED], a distinguished member of the full committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The first point that we should recognize is that the committee bill does include a very capital study designed to assess the effective implementation of competition in the legal services system. It also is sensitive to the need to preserve local control and also to maintain the highest state of ethical conduct in the delivery of legal services. It is this approach that, I think, is the better approach.

The amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Florida, although purporting to produce efficiency or quality, I think may very well lead to chaos. First, it would require frequent changes in the delivery of the system of legal services. There are no real statements as far as awards to be made, and it would lead perhaps to arbitrary, ideological decisions rather than decisions based upon the highest quality of legal services to the poor.

Indeed, the proposal would virtually eliminate all procedural safeguards in the determination of a Legal Services Corporation under the rubric of competition, and this, I think, would be chaotic and detrimental to the program. The other effect it would have would be to dismantle the existing locally based and specialized, coordinated and integrated delivery system. The possibility exists of stripping off various functions, disseminating throughout the community so that some people would skim the system. The effect would be for those poor people with limited resources looking for legal services is that they could be shuttled from pillar to post looking for one specific type of advice or another, and that would be wrong. Indeed, although there is some genuflection to quality, perhaps the overriding criterion would be cost. A system that is driven by cost, a legal system driven by cost has serious potential ethical problems.

Furthermore, the proposal could very well undermine existing pro bono efforts; 12.5 percent of Legal Services funds are used to provide a catalyst for voluntary legal services by private attorneys. If these private attorneys were suddenly allowed to compete directly for funds, this pro bono effort may be severely diminished, and that would be a detrimental effect to the system overall.

It would, I believe, undermine local controls and private attorneys are no longer answerable directly to the local boards which govern Legal Services Corporation and which affect the community-based policy to deliver the best possible services in their community.

Finally, the amendment fails to recognize that competitive bidding has not worked in the area of criminal defense or civil legal aid. In fact, these experiments have resulted in rising costs, deterioration of quality and instability increasing.

Indeed, these proposals are not germane to the delivery of legal services. The proposal, I think, should be rejected. We should, in fact, study carefully and clearly, with articulated standards, whether or not competition is adaptable to this particular model. If we do that, if we follow the committee print, we will make a step forward.

I urge that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I respect very much what the gentleman was saying and most of the points he has made of concern about what might happen in certain cases. I, too, would share that concern if I really thought that was the case. But I have far more confidence in our Legal Services Board that is now in operation than perhaps the gentleman does.

I have watched them operate. They are a balanced board. They have good disputes among themselves.

There is no desire to end the system. I also have confidence in something this Congress adopted of mine that was passed as an amendment years ago, the last time an authorization bill came up here. It never became the law as an authorization bill, but we passed it in the House only. It has been adopted in each appropriations bill thereafter.

That is the local checks that are required that say that local bar associations control the majority of the boards of directors of every one of the Legal Services Corporation granteees. I think that is a very important piece of legislation that was adopted. I think it needs to stand.

My proposal today in no way would detract from that. I authored that back then. I am proud of how it has worked. I have had high compliments from the field and people who are out there today about it.

I would assure the gentleman who just spoke and all others who are concerned about my proposal today that that provides a check on the concerns they are expressing. No proposed grantee could come forward seeking to bid instead of the one that has the money right now and the grant that was not comprised exactly the same way.

We have to have the local bar sanctions. We have to have the same composition, and we have a tremendous check in our local bar associations on that, any kind of mischief that one might envision in that regard.

What my proposal does offer is the opportunity for the National Board to do its job, to be able to have the opportunity to pick and choose among maybe two or three groups that might provide for efficiency, not lower cost but more efficiency in the way to deliver the service. And they would be able to provide what is not provided. That is a check on the quality of that service, a discretion that I think above all else they need to have, not over the individual everyday cases but over the quality of the attorney performances that are there, generally, over the general services being delivered.

If we had a bidding system, that could occur.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOLLUM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the cooperative spirit in which we have worked here. My problem is that I see that this is creating potentially some transaction costs without some of the benefits for this reason.

The gentleman just affirmed that his amendment, which he deserves credit for, which requires, I think he misspoke, not a majority but every single grantee must be approved by, must have a board, a majority of which is approved by the local bar association, every single grantee.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, that is correct.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, as the gentleman points out, he keeps that in this amendment. So what we have is the local bar association must approve a majority of the existing board, and one could not be eligible to take the grant in the future unless one were also approved by the bar association.

So the question is, Are we expecting the local bar association simultaneously to approve one board and then empower another to compete with it? Because as the gentleman from Florida knows, under the operation of his amendment, I could tell him as chairman of the subcommittee, I have insisted on full enforcement of that when it has ever been questioned.

If the local bar association withdraws its confidence from the grantee, they have the effective power to terminate the grant.

So what have we gained except a lot of transaction costs if the local bar association is then going to be empowered to name several competitors?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Reclaiming my time, the point of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is not valid because, quite frankly, I used to sit on boards of the bar locally. We have in my own hometown area over 2,000 attorneys in our bar. There are many diverse views. The board, the council there that governs it, might well promote two or three and say, "OK, they are all fine folks. You decide, Legal Services Corporation."

I am not expecting that we are going to see a lot of competitive bids, but my amendment would allow that to go forward, something this body sanctioned, as I said, in every appropriations bill since 1988. All that is in the bill now is to study it some more. It has been studied to death. What we need to do now is to give the charge to the national board, put the confidence in them that I think they deserve to have at this point, and say, "Go ahead and develop that system. We trust you to do that. We have given you broad guidelines to do it. Where there is an appropriate competitive situation, then you choose, and if not, continue with the grant that is there now." There is no real harm in it. There is a 2-year test involved in it, and after it is implemented, an 18-month report required to us so we can review it and kick it out if we do not agree to it.

I honestly believe, and I respect the gentleman greatly, but I believe that what we need to have is the opportunity for competition to come into the system. It is a mild proposal that I am offering. Again, it is a proposal that has been offered several times.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MFUME). The Chair would advise Members controlling the debate that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has 9 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] for yielding me this time, and congratulate the Committee on the Judiciary for bringing forward this very important bill to reauthorize the Legal Services programs in our country.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the McCollum amendment. I think it is important to point out that poor people start out at a disadvantage in our civil legal system. A study that was done in Maryland, that I had the opportunity to chair a couple of years ago, pointed out that very few people who need legal services—poor people—have the opportunity of even getting legal help today. As a result, for poor people in our judicial system, our civil judicial system is not as favorable as to those who have greater access to lawyers.

This amendment will make the circumstances worse. Rest assured that the law firm that is on the other side of the person, the poor person who has legal help, will not have been selected through a competitive bid process. When people go out to hire private attorneys, they do not shop through competitive bid. They look for a law firm that specializes and has a reputation in the field that is important for the need for which that person seeks legal help. This amendment removes the parity, and I think that is very important.

Yes, it is important that we provide legal help to people who otherwise could not afford it, but it is equally important that we provide that lawyer on the same parity as the opponent lawyer would be. The competitive bid procedure that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] is suggesting would diminish that equality and deny the type of representation that is important.

We are developing specialties in poverty law advocates in this country. The Legal Services Corporation grants help us to get law firms that will specialize in this type of legal work. The McCollum amendment takes a giant step backward in allowing law firms to be able to become expert in poverty law matters. I urge my colleagues to defeat the McCollum amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to vote against this amendment. First let us make one thing very clear when we talk about competition. Competition is often used as a way to increase efficiency. Legal Services indisputably is one of the great bargains the Federal Government gets. The people who work for the Legal Services Corporation are the lowest paid lawyers working for the Federal Government. One FDIC or RTC case probably contains far more than the budget for most States for legal services for a year.

Mr. Chairman, we are talking about people with an average salary, my staff informs me, for a staff attorney of $26,000 for a lawyer, and $837. I do not want to understate. If one has been there more than 15 years, the average is $39,079. Competition, if it worked at all, would probably boost those costs.

Yes, we should regulate how the Legal Services attorneys work; yes, we should restrain the excessive zeal that has from time to time led, I believe, well-intentioned people into error and into ignoring the rules. But the notion that we should introduce what would be substantial transaction costs for very little change, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] acknowledged he was not looking for enormous change, but the transaction costs, the uncertainty, they are great.

This is one other reason for continuity. We are talking about cases, and cases do not begin and expire nearly according to a Federal contract. Cases do not come and go according to the Federal contract cycle. At any given time if we were to stop a contract there would be a very substantial number of ongoing cases, negotiations, litigation, et cetera.

In the interests of efficiency I would hope we would reject this amendment, reminding Members again that every grantee is subject to rules, new rules here, and the approval of a majority of the local bar association at all times.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding me this time. I especially thank him because I am probably going to vote no on this amendment.

I was not even sure when I asked him for time exactly what my vote was going to be, but I am convinced that I must vote no, I believe, for this reason. All of us have consulted from time to time not with just our Legal Services attorneys back home but also with the lawyers in the bar association and others who watch carefully the workings of the Legal Services entities in our particular regions. All of them feel that some modification has to be made, some reforms have to be put in place, and including many of those that the gentleman from Florida and I are espousing here today, none of them sees any benefit to injecting into this process a competition mode.

So conceding to them and deferring to them on this issue, I would oppose the position of the gentleman from Florida.

One saving grace, however, for the McCollum amendment, which, if I had thought about more fully earlier, may have changed my already changing mind, and that is that it is a proposition which phases in this proposition, which allows a trial to take place, a trial mode, for the establishment of this competition. On that basis, those who feel that it might be a good idea should vote for it, keeping it clear for them.

If there is anything more ambiguous I can say about this, I cannot think of it, but I do feel strongly about the competitive angle.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I have only 30 seconds and I yield that to myself.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to point out that all we are doing in this amendment is providing a test opportunity, a field opportunity, but we are requiring it to be implemented, instead of having to come back here again. We are doing exactly the same thing on competition that anybody else would do. Competition is a good idea. It is important if we are going to have accountability in this system. We cannot let Legal Services grantees run rampant around the country and not be checked by the national corporation.

Let us put the power in the hands of the board that is designed to run this organization to decide who gets the money, and not let them be having to give it every time to the same group who might be abusing the process. Let us vote for competition, vote for the McCollum amendment, vote for implementation of competition.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mrs. Byron for, with Mr. AuCoin against.

So the amendment was rejected.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, due to an emergency meeting on the urban crisis in America, I was absent earlier today during rollcall votes 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, and 101. If I had been present, I would have voted "yes" on each of these rollcalls.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 9 printed in House Report 102–512.

AMENDMENTS EN BLOC OFFERED BY MR. STENHOLM

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendments en bloc.

Amendments en bloc offered by Mr. STENHOLM: Page 40, strike line 11 and insert the following:

"(f)(1) A recipient, or any client of such recipient, may not claim or collect attorneys' fees from non-governmental parties to litigation initiated by such client with the assistance of such recipient.

"(2) If any court finds, based on a preponderance of the evidence,

Page 40, line 16, strike "may award" and insert "shall award".

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] will be recognized for 15 minutes and a member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am offering to H.R. 2039 prohibits Federal Legal Services' recipients from collecting attorneys fees from nongovernmental defendants. Private parties who are sued by federally funded attorneys pay four times: First, their taxes, second, their own attorney's fees; third, a money judgment; and fourth, the attorney's fees for taxpayer funded attorneys who sued them. I don't think this is fair.

Opponents of my amendment might ask why I am treating Legal Services' attorneys differently than those practicing in the private sector. Simply put, because they are different. Attorneys practicing in the private sector are not federally subsidized. Unlike a lawyer in his own practice, a Federal Legal Services attorney has less incentive to carefully assess the merits of a case because his legal fees are paid regardless of the outcome.

A better example would be to compare a Federal prosecutor to a Legal Services' attorney. If a U.S. attorney prosecutes a case, they do not sue the defendant for fees. It should be no different for federally funded Legal Services' attorneys.

There are many excellent examples of the need for this amendment. I know of a case in the Panhandle of Texas. The case grew out of a 1980 attempt by the Texas Farm Workers Union to organize workers in two counties during onion harvest. The judge in the case acknowledges that Legal Services' attorneys were on the picket lines almost every day during the strike to lend assistance.

Seventeen grower companies and organizations filed suit under Texas State law to stop the union and Legal Services' organizing activities. Growers also alleged widespread instances of trespassing, blocking entrances to fields, and other activities. The trial judge issued a temporary restraining order banning activities illegal under Texas law and it barred the Legal Services' attorneys from participating in the strike.

The Legal Services Program and union organizers filed a counterclaim in Federal court alleging that their civil rights and freedom of speech had been violated by the temporary restraining order. The Legal Service Program acted as counsel for the entire case, on its own behalf as plaintiff as well as representing the union.

In 1985, the Federal district court dismissed the case with regard to all plaintiffs except one individual union organizer, and awarded him $500, significantly less than the $150,000 demanded in the lawsuit. In the process, the judge also overturned seven Texas right-to-work statutes.

In 1988, both the union and the Legal Services Program sued to recover attorneys' fees from the growers organizations. Even though the union organizer received only a minimal damage award and the Legal Services Program was dismissed from the case, the judge awarded $250,000 to the federally funded Legal Services Program. She compensated the taxpayer-funded Legal Services attorneys at $175 an hour, even though affidavits filed in the case showed that during the nearly one decade the case took to wind through the courts, local attorneys billed on the average of $50 to $75 dollars an hour. She also awarded generous sums for study time and travel time.

Altogether, growers spent $250,000 to $300,000 on their attorney fees, plus $250,000 in fee awards to the LSC-funded attorneys. This half-million plus expenditure recovered only the $500 for a union organizer.

Interestingly, the union organizer has since countersued the Legal Services Program to recover some of the $250,000 attorney fee award, which he claims he is owed for his participation in the suit.

This particular suit is directly attributable to the demise of the fruit and vegetable industry in the High Plains area of Texas. Of the 19 growers in the area in 1980, only 2 remain. The $12 million payroll in 1980 declined to a negligible amount by 1990.

This is just one example of the need for this amendment. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment.

This amendment prohibits local programs or their clients from recovering costs or attorney fees from non-Government defendants under any circumstances. If this amendment were adopted, only poor people would be denied the benefit of fee-shifting statutes such as the Federal Civil Rights Attorneys' Fee Award Act and other Federal and State fee-shifting statutes.

Those existing statutes are designed not just to reimburse plaintiff costs and attorneys' fee, but also to deter the defendant's illegal conduct. It should be remembered that attorneys' fees are only awarded to Legal Services when the case is proven against culpable defendants.

By seeking to remove the salutary deterrent effects of fee-shifting statutes, this amendment would deny to the poor the same litigation options and incentives afforded others under Federal and State law. It further makes it easier for defendants—defendants alone—to collect costs and attorney fees from the Legal Services Program without allowing courts the discretion to consider the fairness of such awards.

H.R. 2039 already substantially expands the circumstances under which a court, using its discretion, can award costs and fees to a defendant. I think the committee bill strikes the right balance, and I strongly urge the rejection of this amendment.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM].

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is one of those critical amendments out here today that we really need to pass, because the Corporation does not have to get money back. We provide that resource through the process of collecting attorneys' fees in cases like this.

I find it to be rather egregious when you really think about it to sue to recover attorney fees. The clients themselves are not put out of pocket one dime. This is not the type of case where you have a client who has to shell out X-amount of dollars to hire the attorney. This is the kind of a case we are dealing with here today where the Legal Services lawyers are representing the poor in case after case, and they are getting paid. They are getting paid the amount of money that they are going to get from the grant services that are here, not from some client who is out there.

We are encouraging lawsuits and litigation and actually causing an unnecessary burden on lots of defense out there by having attorneys' fees recovered.

The whole purpose of the recovery of attorneys' fees in law and the recovery of cost is to keep somebody from being out of pocket.

We are not doing that in this case. We are not fining the individual client out of pocket. And the Government, who is paying for these attorneys it seems to me should not be going out and trying to recover attorneys' fees which add on to the burden of the whole process.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman concede that if other governmental entities, like a local district attorney in their consumer fraud division or environmental division or civil rights division, or a county counsel or an attorney general, brought actions under a statute providing attorneys' fees, that even though those lawyers are paid for by taxpayer funds, that they would be eligible for collection of attorneys' fees?

Mr. McCOLLUM. If I may reclaim my time, there are cases where some of this does go on, but that does not mean that two wrongs will make a right. The fact of the matter is that we have sometimes thousands of dollars of attorneys' fees being collected for a piddly case that is only $50 or $500 or whatever, by Legal Services lawyers representing the poor. We are driving the cost of litigation up. It is a good amendment. I urge an "aye" vote for it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND], a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I rise today in opposition to the amendment of my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM]. It is clearly well meaning, but I think it is a serious mistake for us to adapt this standard.

You know, we in America have had a traditional standard for the awarding of attorneys fees. Unlike the British, we have always attempted to open access to the courts in accordance with other traditions of our constitutional statutory history by saying that at the end of a lawsuit both sides have to pay for their own attorney fees.

Now, in England, where the opposite is true, access to the courts is significantly deterred for the poor or for others who simply cannot withstand the possibility of being saddled by the other side's attorneys fees. But we do, in America, make specific exceptions.

In our legislatures around the country and in this body, the U.S. Congress, they have through the years developed a number of exceptions to the rule. Those exceptions are always where it is very much in the interest of public policy to enforce broader statutes out there, to allow private causes of action, to allow people to recover attorneys fees. In the case of the sort of cases, the lawsuits we are talking about that might be represented by a Legal Aid attorney where the rights of the poor are at stake.

Now, the truth of the matter is that the State legislatures have created many more attorney fee award situations than the Federal Government has.

In the Nebraska Legislature, for instance, we allow attorneys fees to enforce our Consumer Protection Act, to enforce our truth-in-lending laws, and so forth. Now, the problem with the Stenholm amendment is it takes away this opportunity for attorneys to represent the poor in enforcing these statutory mandates at the Federal or State level. It takes those rights away only for a particular class of Americans, and that is the poor and the very poor who seek assistance through legal aid agencies around the country.

As it is, legal aid agencies only have the resources to represent 20 percent to 30 percent of the poor who really need their services. And if we take away this opportunity, why, then, many other poor individuals will go unrepresented and, more important, many of these important Federal and State statutes will go unenforced.

So I think it is a mistake.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge opposition to the amendment.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the LSC reform amendment offered by my esteemed colleague, Mr. STENHOLM, to prohibit the recovery of attorney fees from nongovernmental defendants. Under current law, Government attorneys can sue to recover attorneys' fees from nongovernmental defendants. This is fundamentally unfair, and it distorts the purpose of the recovery of attorneys' fees in the first place.

When private litigants go to court, the plaintiff foots the bill of all of the up-front expenses. If the suit is successful, part of the plaintiff's recovery will effectively pay for those expenses. Usually, also, the plaintiff's attorney will take anywhere from one-third to 40 percent of the award as a fee. The net effect is a smaller award for the plaintiff. Therefore, when private plaintiffs recover attorneys' fees, the purpose is to allow the plaintiff to keep all of the funds to which he or she is entitled.

When LSC attorneys go to court, however, their fees and expenses are paid by the Government. Plaintiffs don't pay them any fees. We all pay their fees through our taxes. The plaintiffs already keep their entire award; they don't have to fork over one-third to their lawyers. Attorneys' fees are available to make plaintiffs whole, and when the plaintiffs are already whole, there is no need for them to recover attorneys' fees.

It is an admirable goal to provide legal services to the poor. I believe that we, as a society, should assist those folks who cannot afford to assert their legal rights. This is why we have a Legal Services Corporation in the first place, and why we support it with our tax dollars. When private defendants are forced to pay attorneys' fees on behalf of plaintiffs who don't pay them in the first place, we are shifting the burden of representing the poor from all of us to those few who are defendants in the cases. This means that defendants pay taxes for attorneys to attack them; they pay their own attorneys; if they are liable, they pay the judgment to the plaintiffs; and under current law, they pay more money to the Government attorneys to generate more lawsuits. Once these defendants have paid the judgment, they've paid their due, and the plaintiffs are made whole. It is fundamentally unfair to place society's burden squarely on the shoulders of a few defendants. I urge my colleagues to support the Stenholm amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. REED], a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. REED. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. The amendment would effectively deny the Legal Services Corporation and its clients from receiving awards of attorneys' fees under various fee-shifting statutes, both Federal and State. This amendment would undercut strongly held and long-recognized public policy positions of the United States.

These fee-shifting statutes are designed to promote enforcement of fundamental rights, to deter illegal conduct, and to provide resources to encourage attorneys to handle these difficult cases.

The effect of this amendment would be to undercut seriously these important objectives of our criminal justice system and our justice system overall.

The other thing that is most disturbing about the amendment is that it truly treats clients of Legal Services as second-class citizens. Other citizens could avail themselves of this measure, but Legal Services lawyers or their clients could not. Indeed, the irony of this amendment, as I read it, is that those very nongovernmental parties protected in this suit could, in a proper situation, claim these legal fees under the fee-shifting statutes. That, it seems to me, is unjust, unfair, and unwise.

If there is a complaint here today by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] or the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], it is not against the Legal Services Corporation, it is against the judges who award these fees, because you have to recognize that it is at the discretion of the judge that these fees are awarded. It is not an automatic consequence of succeeding at trial by a Legal Services Corporation attorney. And if there is an attempt to remedy this situation, it is not here in the Legal Services Corporation Act, it is in looking at other acts and looking at the discretion we give to judges.

So I think the amendment indeed is inappropriate at this juncture in our deliberations.

Finally, there is a perception being circulated and promoted that the defendants in these cases, generally business companies or business enterprises, are not without some type of public subsidy. Indeed, they are publicly subsidized because, by and large, they deduct their legal expenses from their income taxes.

So, to suggest that it is the poor, downtrodden individual being oppressed by Legal Services Corporation is, I think, unfair and wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I have no remaining speakers. Do I have the privilege to close on my amendment, or does the chairman?

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY].

Mr. ESPY. I thank the gentleman from Texas for allowing me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the amendment proposed by my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. Chairman, I come to this issue with a degree of experience because my first job out of law school was working in my hometown as a legal services attorney. So I have worked with poor clients, I have worked in a poor environment, and I know how valuable legal services can be and how much they depend on those services.

In our system of justice, statutes that provide for attorneys' fees are not just to reimburse clients for legal fees; they are enacted to promote the enforcement of fundamental rights, to deter and to punish illegal conduct that violates those rights. Mr. Chairman, finally, to ensure that the victims of illegal conduct can find legal help to vindicate those rights.

Simply put, I believe that this particular amendment, although well meaning, will put these poor clients in the status of second-class citizens. We are being asked to ratify a separate system for citizens who cannot afford private counsel. We are being asked to implement or do a system of justice, and that, in and of itself, would be an injustice, and that simply is wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I know from experience that most attorney fee awards against private parties are made in individual cases and are in very modest amounts. They are awarded in cases where the courts have found serious violation of poor people's rights under State or Federal antidiscrimination laws. They are awarded where the courts have found serious violations of consumer protection laws, violations of landlord-tenant statutes and under domestic violence statutes. These awards are made against unscrupulous landlords, against crooked car dealers, and phony home improvement contractors. They are made against finance companies that illegally take advantage of poor people, against abusive spouses who are rarely criminally charged for beating their wives or their children. These awards are made against real estate agents who steer minorities and others away from white neighborhoods, against local businesses who illegally discriminate, and the list goes on and on.

All I am saying is that few of these cases produce large damage awards, and, without the deterrent effect of a possible attorneys fee award, these private parties would feel free to continue to violate the rights of the poor with impunity. The fee awards in these cases are relatively small, but they often have a large impact in deterring defendants from repeating their illegal actions.

And finally I would say this in summation: Let me point out something that every Member of this House already knows, that resources available for legal services for the poor is already woefully inadequate. While most attorneys fee awards are modest, when pooled together they are an important source of additional funds that enable legal services programs to provide more legal assistance to the poor than they otherwise do.

So, I urge my colleagues to reject this dual system of justice that this amendment implies, and I urge my colleagues to ensure that the poor have the same rights to legal representation as everyone else. Vote against this amendment.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I do not quarrel with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY] and the remarks that he has made, and that is certainly not my intent, and to all of those who have referred to my amendment as causing poor people to be made second-class citizens, I would respectfully ask them to take a real good look at, not only the amendment, as it is written, but the practical effect of the amendment, and that is the money that we are talking about go to the attorneys, the Legal Services Corporation, not to the people that we are talking about who have been aggrieved.

I would not be here offering any amendments today if we had been successful in totally removing the Legal Services Corporation from social activism, from politics. As I have made very clear in my remarks, and I will repeat it again, I commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] for the work they have done in bringing this bill to the floor in the manner in which they have brought it. My part in this amending process is not to destroy. It is to improve upon a system that I support.

I believe, as it has already been stated, that 20 or 30 percent of those people in America who need legal assistance are unable to get it because there is not enough money, and the fight that I have brought on this for 10 years in the belief that if the Legal Services Corporation, their attendees, et cetera, would spend more time delivering legal services for poor people, there would be more of them receiving that which they need, and in this case I sincerely ask my colleagues to answer this question: "Do you believe that it is appropriate for a government-funded organization to sue private enterprise on a social activism program and then to receive compensation for the attorney fees that the taxpayers have already paid for?"

I say to my colleagues, "If you do, vote 'no'." Very simple. But I also ask my colleagues to consider how in the world can that affect those people who are supposedly being wronged.

What we would like to see is the Legal Services attorneys do what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY] has done, and others have done, and the program is working great in those areas where they stay out of politics and social activism. But what we are proposing here is to put a little bit of a break on those who participate in the system on a wrong basis.

I ask for an aye vote on my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as may be remaining to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], for yielding this time to me.

My friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], in his sincere attempt to change this law makes the argument that he does not begrudge legal services for poor people, that huge numbers of poor people do not have the resources because of the limitations on Legal Services, and he wants to see less politics and less social activism. But this amendment has nothing to do with politics or social activism. It has to do with whether or not poor people who retain a Legal Services attorney have the same kind of deterrent effect in their actions as any other plaintiff in society would. This is not about whether taxpayers are funding Legal Services. Otherwise the gentleman and the other supporters of the amendment would be prohibiting the Attorney General, the U.S. attorney, the local DA's, every other public entity that sues based on consumer fraud, or RICO cases, or civil rights or the other statutes which provide attorney fees. They would be prohibiting the Government from collecting attorney fees in those cases.

It also comes from a failure to understand what attorney fees are about. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY] made reference to it. One element in the awarding of attorney fees is deterrence and punishment, and why a defendant who has committed wrongdoing, who has been judged by an independent judge and jury to have violated the law, that defendant should have that particular deterrent removed and, therefore, less disincentive to commit the same activity again because the attorney for the client comes from a legal services program I cannot understand. The fact is any recoveries for attorneys' fees go just for the purpose that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has indicated that he supports. That is it adds the resources to serve more people who are not able to retain counsel on their own because of a lack of income.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to an amendment proposed by my colleague from Maryland, Representative BYRON, that would prohibit Legal Services attorneys from concealing their clients' identity. The names of litigants would have to be revealed not just in litigation but in negotiations conducted prior to litigation, a requirement that no other litigant is required to endure. This is a perfect example of how the so-called reformers of legal services are attempting to weaken the legal service programs into a provider of second-class justice to the poor people it was established to serve.

This amendment had its genesis in unsubstantiated claims that legal services programs were representing fictional farmworkers with imagined claims against farmers. As has been amply demonstrated in the recent report of the Select Committee on Aging, farmworkers, more than almost any other group of people, receive second-class treatment from virtually every person and institution with which they come in contact.

I do not believe that Legal Services attorneys should, as a matter of course, be permitted to conceal their client's identify in precomplaint negotiations or lawsuits. But this protection must be readily available in that very limited number of situations where a farmworker, or other poor person, has a legitimate fear of retaliation if their identify is disclosed. Unfortunately, experience has shown that these fears are not imaginary and that retaliation is not uncommon. In some cases, the retaliation has included beatings, physical threats, loss of job, eviction from employer-supplied housing, blacklisting from future jobs, and threats against friends and family.

Many disputes can be easily resolved without resort to litigation when the client's identity can be protected. This amendment would virtually assure that this kind of pretrial resolution would never happen, because it would escalate the conflict long before suit was filed. Disputes often affect large groups of farmworkers; if an individual's identity cannot be protected, it is unlikely that one individual will step forward to complain on behalf of the group. Even with a Federal court order, this amendment would require that the identity be revealed to the defendant's lawyer. There is little reason for an exploited farmworker to trust the information will go no further.

Attorneys must be able to determine whether a client's interest would be well served by revealing the identity. In most cases, there is little reason to conceal it, but in those few situations where it is critically important to do so, the option must be preserved, especially at the precomplaint stage where the issue can often be resolved quickly and cheaply with a few phone calls and a little cooperation by all concerned. Please let us not further subject farmworkers to second-class treatment. We should be doing all we can to help improve the lot of the poor, rather than singling them out for further limitation on their access to justice. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Byron amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

"(2) No recipient or employee of a recipient may engage in precomplaint settlement negotiations, file a complaint, or otherwise pursue litigation against a defendant unless all plaintiffs have been specifically identified, by name, for purposes of such negotiations or litigation, except to the extent that a court of competent jurisdiction has granted leave to protect the identity of any plaintiff.

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), any Federal district court of competent jurisdiction, after notice to potential parties to negotiations or litigation referred to in paragraph (1) and after an opportunity for a hearing, may enjoin the disclosure of the identify of any potential plaintiff pending the outcome of such negotiations or litigation, upon the establishment of reasonable cause to believe that such an injunction is necessary to prevent probable, serious harm to such potential plaintiff.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the court shall, in a case in which subparagraph (A) applies, order the disclosure of the identity of any potential plaintiff to counsel for potential defendants upon the condition that counsel for potential defendants not disclose the identity of such potential plaintiff (other than to investigators or paralegals hired by such counsel), unless authorized in writing by such potential plaintiff's counsel or the court.

"(C) Counsel for potential defendants and the recipient or employee counsel of the recipient may execute an agreement, in lieu of seeking a court order under subparagraph (A), governing disclosure of the identify of any potential plaintiff.

"(D) The court may punish as a contempt of court any violation of an order of the court under subparagraph (A) or (B) or of an agreement under subparagraph (C).".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and a Member opposed to the amendment will be recognized for 10 minutes.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute amendment made in order by the rule. At what point is it appropriate for me to offer the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman may offer it at any time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRANK OF MASSACHUSETTS AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENTS EN BLOC OFFERED BY MR. STENHOLM OF TEXAS

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendments en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts as a substitute for the amendments en bloc offered by Mr. STENHOLM:

Page 34, line 6, insert after "consultation." the following: "Unless authorized by a court of competent jurisdiction, no recipient, grantee, or contractor of the Corporation or employee of such recipient, grantee, or contractor may file a complaint or petition in a court until all plaintiffs known to plaintiff's counsel at the time have been specifically identified in the complaint or petition.".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will treat the time as fungible under the two amendments. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk. It is amendment number 18 and I am the designee under the rule. This amendment requires identification of all plaintiffs for purposes of negotiation or litigation. If the legal services' attorney believes that it is necessary for his clients protection not to disclose his name to the defendant, a Federal district judge may allow the plaintiffs name to remain confidential. However, disclosure must still be made to the defendant's counsel.

This is a simple, straightforward amendment. It is not directed at the majority of legal services programs, who are doing a good job in representing the civil legal needs of this Nation's poor. Rather, it is aimed at the handful of federally funded attorneys who unscrupulously use their resources to harass and extort settlements from taxpaying defendants, who in many cases are agricultural producers.

One of the reasons I first became interested in reform of the Federal Legal Services Program was because of the large number of cases of abuse related to me by the agriculture community. I want to share an excerpt from a letter by one producer who is experiencing such a problem.

> We seem to continually be subject to one or two harassment or new precedent setting lawsuits, despite our best efforts to be good and far above average farm labor employers. Currently, we are working toward settlement (estimated at $20,000 plus my $15,000 legal fees) over wage payments and MISWAPA (Migrant Seasonal Worker Agriculture Protection Act) violations on employees that never, we believe, worked for either us or our labor contractor. We survived wage and housing scrutiny during the season and yet two years later without any notification we are sent a copy of a suit filed against us by a group of people who claim they worked for us and were not properly paid. Naturally they claim record keeping violation because how can we have payroll records on people who didn't work. Why did it take two years for a group to "remember" they worked and were not paid? * * * We will be forced to take the "rational" choice and settle $70,000 worth of allegations. * * * The big lesson we learned was not to operate where legal services is militant.

Another example of the need for this particular reform is the recent case in New Jersey. A Florida Legal Services' attorney claimed that approximately 150 plaintiffs were employed on a New Jersey blueberry farm during the 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 crop years during the blueberry harvest. This case was brought in the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey as a class action lawsuit in June 1990.

The same Legal Services' attorney filed a similar suit against two other farms in the same court in June 1990, claiming that 140 plaintiffs were employed in 1986, 1987, and 1988.

Growers knew that fewer than one-third of the named plaintiffs represented by the legal services attorney had ever worked on any of the farms. Grower records showed that only 45 of the 150 plaintiffs in the former case worked on that farm, and only 16 of the 140 plaintiffs in the latter case had been employed on those farms. In fact, many had never worked in New Jersey at all during the 4-year period. Grower attorneys advised the legal services attorney repeatedly of these facts and recommended that they drop the bogus plaintiffs and settle the case on the basis of legitimate plaintiffs. The federally funded attorney refused and proceeded with the case.

The Legal Services' attorney subsequently refused to produce the 150 and 140 plaintiffs for depositions and interrogatories during the discovery phase of the trial, which lasted well into 1991. Finally, the grower attorney filed a motion to dismiss plaintiffs together with a rule 11 sanctions motion against both plaintiffs and counsel in February 1991. Eventually, in June 1991, the federally funded Legal Services attorney moved to dismiss 67 plaintiffs in the first farm case, and dropped 82 and 94 plaintiffs in the suit against the other farms.

How could a federally funded Legal Services attorney have brought suit against these growers so lacking in basic knowledge of the true facts? The plain truth was that the Florida Legal Services attorney knew, and had known from the beginning of the cases, that most of the workers had never been in New Jersey, much less worked for any of the individual farms. It was engineered from the start.

During discovery, one worker attested that in 1989 the Legal Services attorney held a meeting in Florida to solicit plaintiffs for the New Jersey cases. During the meeting, the Legal Services' attorney said that he would "get them money" if they joined the suits, and that the growers couldn't prove they hadn't worked there, and that the workers "would not go to jail for joining the lawsuit."

Further, New Jersey attorneys for the growers compared notes with Florida growers' attorneys. They discovered that many of the workers in the New Jersey cases were named plaintiffs against growers in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, and Maryland during 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989. In these cases, the workers provided detailed information on their employment history and residences between 1986 and 1989. The Florida federally funded Legal Services' attorneys managed and actively participated in all aspects of the cases, including pleadings, motions, and discovery.

The cost to the growers of unraveling the complexity of this case, and defending themselves against patently false claims, has been enormous. To date, over six figures in legal fees have been incurred by the farms. Settlement of the case is still pending.

Again, this is a simple, straightforward amendment. I am not an attorney, but many of my colleagues are. Tell me would it be difficult, if not near impossible, to defend a case if you didn't know who was suing you?

This amendment is about fairness and attempts to eliminate some of the abuse that can and does occur in the Federal Legal Services Program. I urge my colleagues to support this much-needed reform.

Is it so unreasonable to expect this House to demand one simple thing of our Legal Services Corporation, that we know who is suing us? It is a fundamental right of our legal system. I do not understand how anybody could oppose this amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to try to answer the question, but I am sure my friend, the gentleman from Texas, recognizes that this, if it were adopted, would only apply to this area of the law. What about in private litigation? Let us remove the question of Legal Services altogether. Can the gentleman not think of situations where, because of the unequal position of the parties, this may have a chilling effect on the rights of plaintiffs?

Mr. STENHOLM. Our amendment provides that where there is a question of the rights, that a judge may intervene, and certainly the secrecy of the plaintiff may be determined by a judge in this case, and certainly in the case that you mention, absolutely.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If the gentleman will continue to yield, the sense difference between your amendment and I think the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK]—and I am not going to take up all the gentleman's time with this—is that he at least allows a complaint to be filed, and then upon a showing of good cause a judge would make the decision.

The primary objection I have to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] is that it would take up valuable time of the court to make that decision, and the parties may end up settling without even filing a lawsuit.

Mr. STENHOLM. Again, what I am trying to avoid is some of the extremely bad situations that I think my friend from Texas would agree have been egregious abuses of the law. That is what we think our amendment does. I believe it does. I certainly do not have the intent of doing the things that the gentleman suggests might happen as a result of this. This is not the purpose.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If the gentleman will yield further, no one condones those kinds of egregious situations, because they breed disrespect for the law. The lawyer who does that ought to be disbarred, in my opinion. We are not trying to protect those lawyers.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I have offered a substitute which says that at the time you go to court you have to name the plaintiffs unless you can get a court to give you permission to keep them unnamed.

Now I would note that the amendment offered by my friend from Texas, on behalf of the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON], also would allow a court to do that. We all recognize there are circumstances. But there is one very big difference right away. I am the States rights player in this game as opposed to my federalizing friend from Texas, because in the amendment of the gentlewoman from Maryland, if Legal Services brings a State court complaint and they have a reason to keep private the names of the plaintiffs, under the amendment of the gentlewoman from Maryland they would have to go to Federal court for permission to do that. So a Federal judge would have to step in and say OK, State of Texas, we will decide whether or not this will happen. And it does seem to me it makes much more sense, as it does in the amendment I offer, to leave the whole proceeding in State court.

The question then is why must you name the names early on. It is clear that there are good reasons, sometimes, for keeping the plaintiffs private, and in fairness to my friend from Texas and the gentlewoman from Maryland, they acknowledge that. We all agree that in certain circumstances you can keep the names private.

I read from a case, Gomez against Buckeye Sugars in which Federal District Judge Young says, "Suits have been brought by the Secretary of Labor on behalf of unnamed persons for violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Secretary, relying upon his Government privilege," now hers, "need not divulge the names of the real plaintiffs and protect them from possible reprisal."

Let me say with regard to the gentleman from Texas, the statements he made about abuses are outrageous. Under the bill we have brought forward, in other provisions the Legal Services Corporation could be sanctioned and should be sanctioned if its grantees did this, and it would come out of the hides of those grantees. That is, lawyers who brought a case with no basis under the bill we have brought forward would be subject to penalties from the court, as they should be, and the grantees would have to pay them.

Whether or not you keep the name of a plaintiff quiet does not deal with those abuses. Remember, if you are a defendant and you believe that you are being assailed on behalf of ghost plaintiffs, you have a very easy response. You say, "Fine, I'll see you in court. I'll see you in court and you will have to name those plaintiffs." And if someone then proceeds to court with ghost plaintiffs, not only should he or she be subject to the disciplinary action my friend from Texas mentioned of disbarment, but the legal services grantee could be sanctioned. That is, any Legal Services grantee who brings a complaint on behalf of nonexistent employees, if you are the defendant, you say under our bill, "I'll see you in court, and when you get to court be ready to pay me if you cannot show me some real live employees."

So I believe that the proposal we have, which says you can threaten me, you can tell me you are going to file a suit, and if I do not believe you have a real plaintiff I will ignore you, and the day you take me to court you have the burden of either producing those names or persuading a judge that you have to keep them secret. I do not think you will be able to persuade many judges to keep nonexistent people secret. Then if you have brought such a case I am going to get recovery from you.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts obviously was very persuasive with the States rights argument. I concede that point.

I guess the only question that I have in this is why do we have to go to court to settle some of the problems that we have all agreed should never be occurring. That is the fundamental problem that I have with this and why we believe that our amendment was in a positive light.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to respond. In fairness, I say to my friend that the reason to go to court is this: If there is a legitimate dispute we both agree that there will be circumstances in which you ought to keep the name secret, but we need an arbiter to do that. At the complaint stage there is none, and obviously it would not make sense if I have to give you the names at the complaint stage. What am I going to do at the court stage, make you forget them? So that is the reason that there is no neutral arbiter to do that until we reach the complaint stage. But I would add, thanks in part to the prodding the gentleman from Texas has given me and others, we now have very clearly for any defendant wrongfully sued a right to recover, as my friend acknowledges, and he should take credit for that. And I think together, that is the protection.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] as a substitute for the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendments en bloc was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments en bloc offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], as amended.

The amendments en bloc, as amended, were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 13 printed in House Report 102-512.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GEKAS

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

and ensure that no funds made available to recipients are used to pay for any administrative or related costs associated with an activity prohibited in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C);".

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRANK AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STENHOLM

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the rule, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. FRANK as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GEKAS: Page 37, line 17, insert after "title." the following: "Public funds received by any recipient or other grantee or contractor of the Corporation, including funds from Interest on Lawyer Trust Account (IOLTA) programs, shall not be used to engage in publicity or propaganda as restricted by section 1007(a)(5).".

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the Chair announces that the time will be fungible, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] will each be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, when Legal Services was first established in this country, everyone applauded who felt that this was intended to do, and in the large measure did, fill the tremendous gap that had arisen between access to the courts for the poor and access for everyone else. And it was determined, as time went on, that we were going to do as a Congress what was necessary to do, not only to fund but to create a structure that would facilitate the flow of Legal Services to the poor.

An unfortunate thing grew out of all of this, unfortunate in the eyes of many, and I share that view that it was and is unfortunate when Legal Services entities in our various communities began using their now considerable power to begin to lobby. When I say lobby I mean to veer away from the stated purposes of Legal Services; namely, to offer legal representation in the courts, in front of district justices and of magistrates for cases that have arisen by reason of a poor person's inability to deal with his or her landlord and inability to deal with some domestic situation that grew out of child abuse, or spousal abuse, or some domestic difficulty, veer away from all of that, which was why we instituted Legal Services in the first place. And all of a sudden to see attorneys from Legal Services appearing to lobby in front of the legislatures, in front of groups who have the power to change the law, or to change regulations, or to change guidelines in the way governmental entities would conduct their business.

Then one modification came up after another, and pretty soon it became clear that many times—and this really grated some of the Members of Congress—that the lobbying efforts were actually used to move against the U.S. Government which was in itself funding, and espousing, and posturing Legal Services, so we saw the whole matter convoluted.

Who were suffering, in our judgment, at that time while this gigantic battle was teeming? The poor people who wanted to fight a rental problem had to wait their turn while the tremendous debate was going on on the Federal Government's policy, general policy nationwide, on this subject or that subject. This, whether actual or perceived, was militating against the stated purposes indicated for the establishment of Legal Services in the first place.

My amendment simply makes it clear once and for all that lobbying services will no longer be permitted or granted by or to Legal Services entities in our country. This is not to say that in our pursuit of a case in representing a poor person that the Legal Services attorney cannot contact a State government agency or even a Federal Government agency to determine what are the informational background materials that are required to pursue a case on behalf of a poor person. But no longer, after my amendment is adopted, which I hope it will be, will the poor people's services be diverted for some gigantic theme that the Legal Services entity wishes to foment in front of a legislative body.

I ask that there be support for my amendment, and naturally a vote in opposition to the Frank amendment which is being offered as a substitute.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment, among many other things, seeks to prohibit Legal Services programs from lobbying Congress regarding funding of Legal Services programs. Is that an accurate conclusion of that part of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. GEKAS. If it is not, I want it to be.

Mr. BERMAN. All right. It does. Does the gentleman know how much the Department of Defense, the Department of Transportation, the Department of State, the cities, and the counties spend of their funds to lobby Congress on programs and funding directly affecting their departments?

Mr. GEKAS. No. And I do not care.

Mr. BERMAN. Could the gentleman care to tell us why this one group of governmentally funded people should not be able to approach us about their funding?

Mr. GEKAS. If the gentleman were listening, and I am willing to provide him a transcript of the remarks I just made, I have tried, and I will try again, to make it abundantly clear that for every effort that the Legal Services Corporation mounts in a generic lobbying effort in front of a legislative body, or an administrative agency, or the Congress—which, of course, is a legislative body, to that extent—they are robbing the poor people who have individual pressing personal, emotional problems, many, many times from attending to that kind of duty which we prescribe for them in the first place, and if we allow to continue some of the things that we have seen where another total industry has grown up for money being provided and activity being fomented for lobbying services, we see that we could probably, if we took any accounting, that most of the Legal Services activity is vented in one way rather than in the way that we intended, rental problems, spouse problems, domestic problems, landlord problems, garbage collection problems. Those are the kinds of things that we want to make sure poor people will have the ability to have access to the courts to provide.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. What the gentleman's amendment does is it says, first of all, if a Legal Services program wants to spend a dime of its LSC, congressionally appropriated funds, to lobby for a dollar so it can serve more people, the kind that the gentleman spoke so eloquently to, they cannot do it. But, secondly, it says if a State wants to provide funding or if the State bar in a State wants to provide funding so they can lobby on the level of Federal funding of Legal Services programs, they cannot. If a private philanthropic foundation wants to provide money so that no taxpayers' money at the State level, no compelled funding is being used to lobby on something that every other Federal, State, and local agency can lobby about regarding their programs, and when the Department of Defense lobbies, they say, "We are spending some taxpayer moneys because we think what we are lobbying about, that is, us getting more money, helps our national security," and the Department of Transportation says, "It helps our roads," and all of this, and I cannot fathom what the gentleman's justification for that kind of a distinction is.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. That is true. You cannot.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to invite the gentleman from Pennsylvania to engage in the 3 minutes allotted to me.

As the gentleman well knows, section 5 that is in the bill severely restricts the ability, I believe we would agree, the possibility of Legal Services Corporation attorneys from participating in that activity we call lobbying.

To begin with, as I understand it, it precludes communication with Federal, State, or local officials except upon the request of such an official. It prohibits them from lobbying where the measure under consideration affects appropriation to the functioning of the Legal Services Corporation or where the communication is on behalf of an eligible client affected by a measure who has retained the recipient to represent his or her interest therein. So there are only two or three situations that I can think of, and I am not saying that I can think of all of them, but the instances are so very limited now, the question then arises: Who then will allow the poor people to redress their grievances? With the gentleman's amendment adopted, who then, what lawyer, where, will be able to come before a committee of the Congress?

Sometimes these people have good ideas. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], and the gentleman and I both know that, and that as many minds as we can put on any problem, in a sense they deal hands-on with the people who are affected by some of the laws that we try to pass on a regular basis. Why do we take away the only person who is in a position in the capacity of a lawyer to be able to assist them?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, that does not, in my judgment, I respectfully submit, deprive them at all.

There are legislators, there are representatives on the school board, there are other representatives on legal entities and governmental bodies that will always be available. I meet, and I know the gentleman does, with the poor people all the time and try to translate their needs, legislative needs, into broad policy changes and into other changes that reflect their needs. But when they have a rent problem with their landlord, they do not want Representative WASHINGTON or Representative GEKAS, they want immediate service to determine what the outcome will be of their rental future. And if we are going to allow the Legal Services entity to get involved in what CRAIG WASHINGTON ought to be involved in, and GEKAS, we are keeping them away from their remedy.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Two quick points: Let us use the gentleman's example about the rent. Suppose you, as a conscientious Congressman that you are, get out there among the poor people in your district or wherever, and that you find a problem that, in your judgment, requires Federal intervention, and you want to introduce a bill, you are preventing the very people that you are trying to help from having Legal Services lawyers represent them to help you persuade the rest of the Members to pass such a bill, sir.

Mr. GEKAS. If the gentleman will yield further, I would be glad, and have done so in the past, to promise, and to then produce and introduce a bill. I just did so on eviction of the elderly based on something very similar that the gentleman is discussing, and do not need the Legal Services attorney to advise me how to do it. They do not need to lobby me to tell me. I have already been lobbied.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] has expired.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to conclude the question and I will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania the balance of the minute. It will take me about 45 seconds to answer the question.

If we follow what the gentleman says to its logical conclusion, there should not be any lobbyists. Rich people should not get any lobbyists. Middle-income people should not get any lobbyists, because if we carry what the gentleman has said to its logical conclusion, the gentleman has said that if we do our jobs right and if we go out and investigate and all, we do not need any lobbyists. If that is true, then I meet with rich people and middle-income people and poor people. If poor people do not need lobbyists to help me since I go out and talk to them and the gentleman goes out and talks to them, all we have to do as Members of Congress is go out and talk to all the different strata of people in our communities and we do not need all these high-powered paid lobbyists who line the Halls around here.

Mr. GEKAS. But does the gentleman not see, the nonpoor do not need legal assistance to promote their problems or to promote solutions to their problems.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The poor people do?

Mr. GEKAS. The poor people do, and we are providing an entity for them. We do not have to provide anything else for them while we are trying to concentrate on their needs as poor people, not as engines of change in policy which we as legislators must be the engines.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If we were really taking care of the business of poor people, there would not be so many of them.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Chair will advise those persons in the gallery that they are here as guests of the House of Representatives and that there should not be any displays of emotion, either for or against legislation or debate.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I think the debate now has degenerated a little bit on this issue. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] has one proposal. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has another.

The proposal of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] honestly, I am sure in his judgment, says we are going to ban lobbying at the grass roots and so forth, for the same reasons, I presume, that I support banning lobbying, and that is trying to take some of the politics out of this whole process in order to get more support for Legal Services, and because we all believe, and we have only about $350 million in resources, and we simply cannot afford to be spending that on all kinds of things. We have to narrow the scope of where it is spent.

But there is a big difference between what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] propose, despite their basic approach in similarities, and that is that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] makes exceptions, and big railroad engine type exceptions, one of them being to allow for lobbying in situations where there is an eligible client and there is approval for it by the project director, or his designee.

I would submit to my colleagues that means, practically speaking, that you are going to have all the lobbying up here or in Tallahassee, in my home capital, or anybody else's State capital that we have always had, or maybe even more so, and that is going to be self-defeating. That is not doing the job.

The only way we can prohibit and restrict lobbying, which I do not think most Members in this body want to see Legal Services lawyers do, is by adopting the Gekas proposal, not the Frank proposal. That is the only way, because the exceptions are too great in here.

Now, why do we not want to do lobbying? Lobbying is, first of all, not the primary purpose of the Legal Services Corporation lawyers. They are out there to provide everyday Legal Services in the courtroom, in litigation, in domestic relations cases, in landlord-tenant problems, in things that we do not have enough money to get enough lawyers to do as it is to provide those services and that kind of relief. Instead, too many lawyers historically, which has given Legal Services such a bad name and why we had so many other problems. We are debating over monitoring and so on today, we have had these lawyers representing themselves to be on behalf of their clients, many of whom do not have a very strong relationship, they are class action groups, that they go out and get. They have been going up to the State capitals. They have been coming up to Washington. They have been trying to change poverty law. They have been trying to eradicate things in the broad picture of solving the problems of the poor, instead of spending their time working on the everyday legal problems that poor people have plenty of and do not have lawyers to represent them on.

So our purpose and why the Gekas proposal is so important is to narrow that back down, take some of the politics out of this, get them out of the business of lobbying and get them back to the business of using the minimum resources available to do the job they were intended to do and always have the resources to get them to do, and that is to provide poor people access to the courts and to handle their everyday litigation matters and their everyday contract matters, and not to be sending them up to the capitols to be involved in the process of politicking for some cause or celeb of a broad nature that many of these lawyers want.

So Mr. Chairman, I urge defeat of the Frank proposal that does not prohibit lobbying at all, because it has railroad train size, engine size holes in it, and I urge the adoption of the Gekas antilobbying proposal.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR], one of the leading members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to support the Frank amendment to the Gekas amendment. While I am not totally satisfied with the restriction, I am willing to agree that it may be a necessary compromise.

There are absolutely no grounds, however, on which to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] and it should be rejected.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] purports to limit my ability and right as a Member of Congress to speak to and request information from local Legal Services programs in my State of Oklahoma at any time and in any manner I so choose.

Let me give you an example of the absurdity of this amendment. I was the original sponsor of chapter 12, the Family Farmer Bankruptcy Act. This act is set to sunset in 1993.

For the past few months I have been holding meetings to gather information from farmers, bankers, bankruptcy judges, trustees, and bankruptcy practitioners in order to make an informed decision about the possible extension of this bankruptcy section.

Family farmers involved in bankruptcy are sometimes represented by Legal Services attorneys. These attorneys have been contacted both in writing and by telephone to discuss particular aspects of the farm bankruptcy issue.

Since they are practitioners they have been asked, as all others have been asked to comment on the value of the statute. They may not have a specific client directly.

This is democracy in action. I have received valuable assistance and information critical to my job as a legislator and representative of my district.

In many instances Congress considers legislation that has a direct impact on the rights and responsibilities of low-income clients involving such issues as Medicare/Medicaid, food stamps, child support, and adequate low-income housing.

Often Legal Services attorneys know the law better than the agency personnel and may be the only ones in the legal community who may represent these clients. Thus, only they will have the relevant information.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] suggests that I should not have the right to obtain such information. There is a suggestion that it is somehow tainted because it is federally funded.

If that is the case I would like to eliminate every White House and Federal agency lobbyist/personnel that comes up here to inform me or my staff about that particular agency's views or wishes on a certain bill.

Much more disturbing is that, once again, that side of the aisle wants to perpetuate the dual system of justice and representation in this country for the poor.

They have continually attacked the poor in the criminal justice system and now want to squeeze the poor out of full representation on the civil side.

Why is it that Members see no problem subsidizing the lobbying, rulemaking intervention or administrative representation done on behalf of the rich and powerful corporations in this country through tax deductions and yet are eager to deny the poor the right to have even a limited voice in their own democratic government?

In fact the Federal Government, through the auspices of Vice President QUAYLE subsidizes direct corporate interference in Government rulemaking through his secret meetings on competitiveness.

Unless any of you have forgotten, one of the prime moving forces behind the creation of legal services was to provide an entry into the judicial system for the poor and disadvantaged so that other more violent means of protest could be forestalled.

Access to the system of Government and a feeling that there is true participation is essential to curbing the rising feeling of alienation felt by the low-income citizens of this country.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] directly and intentionally interferes with my responsibilities as a representative and is unduly restrictive on my rights as a Member of this House.

I will not put up with the continuing assault on my rights as a Member of this House.

I suggest that this amendment is unwarranted and unconscionable and urge Members to not further the gap between the rich and the poor. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] must be rejected.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Member of Congress who ought to look at this—the gentleman from Oklahoma says Members of Congress ought to look at this—is the gentleman from Oklahoma. There is nothing in the Gekas amendment that prohibits this very groundroots, grassroots kind of information seeking to which the gentleman refers. His bankruptcy hearings, et cetera, even when the Gekas amendment should be adopted, would not prevent the gentleman from Oklahoma from contacting legal aid to determine what procedures are available, what informational background there might be, what materials there might be to help in determining what change in policy he, the gentleman from Oklahoma, as a Member of Congress, wants to try to bring about in the Halls of Congress. We are simply saying information seeking which the Gekas amendment permits is not lobbying and lobbying is what we seek to prohibit and, therefore, implicit, and with a studied review by lawyer like the gentleman from Oklahoma or California or Massachusetts or Texas or any place, would lead to that conclusion.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I must disagree with my friend as to what his own amendment will do. I will read from the gentleman's amendment. He says, "No funds made available to recipients are used at any time"——

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, where is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. The first page. No. 5, "Insure that no funds made available to recipients are used at any time to directly or indirectly," and then I skip down, "to influence the passage or defeat of any decision by a Federal, State or local agency, to support or defeat legislation pending in Congress." Then let us go to page 2: "To pay for any oral or written communication, personal service, advertisement, telegram, letter or other device, written matter intended or designed to influence any decision by a Federal, State or local agency."

Now, in other words, on C, and this is very relevant to the comments of the gentleman from Oklahoma, it is most relevant—and I will yield time to the gentleman later.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I will take back my time and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman's amendment says is, "No funds made available at any time may directly or indirectly," and I will move down to line 15, "to pay for any oral or written communication," et cetera, "intended or designed to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States or by any State or local legislative body, or intended or designed to influence any Member of Congress or any other Federal, State or local elected official."

In other words, when the gentleman from Oklahoma asks a Legal Services attorney under this amendment, "What do you think the impact of that will be on the poor?", the Legal Services attorney may not answer, because the gentleman says, "No funds may be used directly or indirectly to try to influence a legislator."

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. SYNAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that it is even worse than that because the gentleman from Pennsylvania in committee had this language, which said, "except that nothing in this paragraph shall prevent any response to a specific written request by a Federal, State or local agency or an elected official for information," and they took that out. That means legal aid cannot even respond if I a U.S. Congressman asked them their thoughts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Or if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] asks them, which is even worse/worse.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield from my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from Massachusetts quotes the exact language that this lawyer says, that this lawyer from Massachusetts is erroneously interpreting. The language that he quotes is the language that specifically, or by reading into it as intended, says the gentleman from Massachusetts says that this is the pertinent language, "intended or designed to influence any decision."

Now, that is what I am saying. If the gentleman from Oklahoma calls the Legal Services entity in Oklahoma and asks for information as to bankruptcy, unless the information there is intended to influence, it is innocuous and only helpful to the legislator.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we are at the nub of this. What the gentleman says is you can talk to the gentleman from Oklahoma as long as it is your sworn intention to have no impact whatsoever on anything he does. What are you going to say, "Good morning, MIKE, how are you doing? Great boots," but you cannot talk about legislation?

The gentleman misread his own amendment. It does not just say you cannot try to influence a decision; it says you cannot pay for a telephone call, any communication, of the time of the employee, you may not communicate with him if what you are doing is "intended or designed to influence any Member of Congress," or any other Federal, State, or local official. In other words, you may not discuss public policy if you work for Legal Services with any Federal, State, or local official unless you are absolutely guaranteed to try to have no impact on him whatsoever.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I add to what the gentleman just said, and you cannot do that even if you are paid 100 percent by private foundation money, by State grants for this purpose, regardless of what a local or State decision is or what a private party contributes. This is the most incredible reach I have seen in any legislation.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield to my friend from Oklahoma, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SYNAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why he struck this paragraph that legal aid cannot even respond to a U.S. Congressman's request if it was such a good thing in committee?

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania, as long as he does not try to influence the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know which one to answer. I have only limited time. But if the gentleman from Oklahoma is saying that when he makes an inquiry of the legal services entity about the bankruptcy seminars which he is holding, under my amendment the information that he seeks, the information that he asks for and would receive can be interpreted not to intend and not designed to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Let me say to my friend—and I will yield myself 2 additional minutes—the gentleman from Oklahoma goes to a Legal Services attorney and says, "I want to do the right thing in bankruptcy. I do not want to cheat the creditor, but I don't want to unduly oppress the debtor. What is the best thing to do?" What the gentleman from Pennsylvania says in his amendment, I say to my friend, is you cannot respond in a way that would try to influence not a decision of the legislative body but that of the gentleman. The gentleman's language on lines 22, 23, and 24 say you may not engage in any communication if you are being paid by any source "intended or designed to influence any Member of Congress," any Federal, State, or local official. You may not, therefore, give your views on public policies to any local official, any State official, or any Federal official. That goes way too far.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I ought to hesitate for getting into this legal argument, because the last discussion sort of left me out in the cold. I have read the same law, I have read the same language that the attorneys are arguing. For the life of me, I do not see how anybody who has a Legal Services attorney is precluded from having that attorney advise me regarding the specifics in this legislation.

What I read when I read this amendment is very clear; section 5, lobbying, A, "to pay for any publicity or propaganda intended." Now, that is why I support the Gekas amendment. I am not talking about precluding an individual poor person from having the opportunity to have legal counsel from legal services to deal with those legitimate ideas of the client that are specified in section B, in which it says, "an exception, when legal assistance is provided by an employee of a recipient to an eligible client on a particular application, claim or case which directly involves the client's legal rights or responsibilities."

That is what the amendment says.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. STENHOLM. I do not have the numbers on mine.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. The last three lines, page 2. There is additional language.

By the way, I also in my amendment say, in my substitute, "no publicity or propaganda."

But here is the language that bothers the gentleman from Oklahoma and me—and I will yield the gentleman an additional minute when we re-do the time.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] says, "You cannot have any oral or written communication, et cetera, intended or designed to influence any Member of Congress, or Federal, State or local official."

A local legal services person may not talk to the gentleman from Texas under this amendment if there is a chance that it would influence his views on public policy, and, frankly, a lot of people would not want to talk to us, charming as we may be, if they could not influence our views on public policy.

Mr. STENHOLM. Except when legal assistance is provided by any employee of a recipient to an eligible client on a particular application, claim or case.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. I would say to the gentleman——

Mr. STENHOLM. It is all the same amendment.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. But that is not bankruptcy law in general. Yes, the gentleman is correct, but the example of the gentleman from Oklahoma was not a particular claim, it was not a particular case from a particular client. In this case there was not a special client. The gentleman from Oklahoma was asking for expertise about public policy in general, and the exception that my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has mentioned would not work in the case of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. STENHOLM. Boy, that is where the lawyers lose me. I mean the English is plain in this amendment.

Let me just say in conclusion my support of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] is very simply this:

Last year, 1991, 361-plus legal services spent 14,437 hours lobbying. Now we cannot have it both ways. We have limited resources, and that is my total interest.

I do not quarrel with the gentleman from Oklahoma in what he said. That makes good sense. I do not read the amendment to do all of those things.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] has expired.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STENHOLM. But the bottom line is, unless we can go somehow a little bit further in tightening some of the loopholes and some of the things that allow some, some of the Legal Services Corporations, around the country from doing these things, we cannot be concerned about the lack of legal care for poor people and at the same time not want to tighten up further the restrictions on those who want to stretch this language and do things that this Member does not read that it is doing. Part of it says yes. Part of it says no. We either support lobbying, or not, and I think we can get all kinds of organizations to lobby. My support of the Gekas amendment is that we do not need to have the Legal Services Corporation involved in lobbying. Yes, providing legal services if they need to talk to this Member or any other Member, and I read the amendment that it permits that. Others say no.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSTAD].

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which would prevent the poor from having legal representation in administrative rulemaking and before legislative bodies. The Gekas amendment ignores the fact that legal problems are not always best addressed in the courts.

Legislative and administrative rulemaking representation is frequently the more appropriate and effective means of resolving the legal problem of an eligible client. Rules of professional responsibility require lawyers to consult with their clients about the means that are to be used to pursue a solution to their problems. If the client were a fee-paying client, and the most effective approach to the problem would be seeking a legislative clarification or change, that option certainly would be presented to the client. Clearly, low income people should have access to the same full range of legal options.

Also, as a former practicing attorney, I know that such representation is cost effective. Eligible clients often require legal services attorneys to effectively influence legislatures to protect existing legal rights or obtain relief which can often only be provided by a legislative body. Other legal problems arise from administrative agency policies that affect the poor and benefits to which they are entitled. Representation is essential to protect existing rights, assure conformity with legislation, and inform agency officials of the impact which the proposed policies will have on indigent people.

The bottom line here is this: By denying access to legislative bodies and in administrative rulemaking, the Gekas amendment encourages protracted and expensive litigation on matters that are best resolved by these bodies, and thus will waste scarce program dollars and judicial resources.

The Gekas amendment also bars grantees from responding to requests of elected officials. Clearly, there is no justification to deny legislators unfettered access to critical information they need to effectively legislate. When it comes to legislation affecting the poor, obviously legal services attorneys possess a certain expertise that should not be off-limits to elected officials.

In Minnesota, less than 2 percent of the work of legal services programs is devoted to this kind of client representation. But Minnesota's programs have benefited many thousands of low-income people through legislative and administrative representation in such areas as public benefits, child custody and support, consumer protection, farm programs, health care, social services, landlord-tenant relations, housing, and special education. The value of this representation is great and would be sorely missed.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2039 correctly prohibits grassroots lobbying. There is no justification, however, to ban all legal representation before legislative bodies and in administrative rulemaking. I urge my colleagues to support the Frank substitute to the Gekas amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSTAD] has really outlined in his very strong opposition to the Gekas amendment what the problem is, which we owe it to ourselves to reiterate; namely, what is the basic and foremost purpose of the Legal Services entity in the first place? The gentleman from Minnesota says that we must allow for full implementation of whatever Legal Services wants to do I support of administrative agencies and full lobbying efforts. Yet even the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] purports to prohibit lobbying. The same amendment that the gentleman from Oklahoma supports, the Frank amendment, prohibits lobbying, at least in its original cited purpose, and then goes on to allow certain exceptions. It is in this field where we are trying to narrow the debate.

Mr. Chairman, the Gekas amendment makes it abundantly clear that lobbying shall not be the chief rationale for the existence of the legal services entity. That is what the gentleman from Minnesota wishes to see accomplished. He would like to see, from what his remarks are, a full ability of the Legal Services clients to go before legislatures and administrative agencies. Well, that was not the original purpose. Now, if he says that that should be the purpose, well, that is a different argument. But he also states only 2 percent, or something like that, have in the past, of the resources of the Legal Services, have been devoted to this type of activity. We have information that says that in the year 1988, with less than half of the Legal Services Corporation's grantees completely reporting their lobbying activities, the report showed that 128 grantees hired 603 lobbyists, dedicated 55,000 and some hours, and spent over $2 million for legislative and administrative lobbying efforts. We are saying the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] prohibits lobbying. The Gekas amendment prohibits lobbying, but the Gekas amendment makes it clear that there is an absolute division between lobbying and the pure purpose of the Legal Services Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] fudges it, allows loopholes to exist, and, by a convolution of language, does not prohibit lobbying.

I say reject the Frank amendment and give yourself a chance to support the Gekas amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] to fudge further.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is a very strange one when it is fully understood. This distinction that came up in the colloquy that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] had with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] and others seeks to differentiate between some detached arm's length providing of information and the design to influence a result. It is an effort to sanitize a process that cannot be sanitized. It is an effort that ignores the fundamental pluralistic nature of our society. It is an effort I might expect to see from some people on this side saying "How do we keep big business from influencing Congress," or "How do we keep polluters from influencing Congress," or "How do we keep people who are milking consumers from influencing Congress."

It is an effort that essentially says that we, listening to different sides of a question, cannot make intelligent judgments. It is a fundamental rejection of this entire process.

But it is only done for one group. It is not done for the polluters, not done for the big businessmen, not the bankers, and not the insurance industry. It is done for issues that have direct impact on poor people. It is a very bizarre way to start the process of insulating us from inappropriate pressures or contacts by people who want to influence the process.

Under the immigration law there is a provision that says growers in Pennsylvania who cannot find enough domestic farm workers can bring in temporary labor to pick their crops. It says but the growers who want to take advantage of that special program have to provide certain kinds of farm labor housing. The Congress passes that law. Now, the Secretary of Labor has to promulgate regulations.

Tell me how the Secretary of Labor should engage in that process of finding out what kind of housing that grower must provide or what kind of transportation that grower must provide without getting input from all sides?

Under the process the gentleman suggests through his amendment, the Secretary of Labor is essentially an administerial function through delegated authority to set up standards for housing will get massive briefs from the Farm Bureau, from the Pennsylvania Growers Association, from the chambers of commerce to which the growers are members, massive briefs seeking to have as low and as least costly standards as possible. Understandably, this is part of the process.

But the people who are best able to martial the interests of the farm workers because they have been working with them and communicate in a way that the process encourages through briefings, through public comments, through the discussions that will come on behalf of the growers, not only through the open and formal processes, but through all the formal processes, through the White House, through the Senators, through the Members of Congress seeking meetings with their leaders, all of that will be allowed. But even at the request of the Congressmen, even at the request of the Secretary of Labor, even with money not paid for through the Legal Services Corporation, the Legal Services attorneys will not be allowed, who are specialists and who know about these standards and farm labor housing, will not be able to bring forth the perspective of farm labor. That is just not fair.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] supports the Frank amendment. Will the gentleman tell me which section of the Frank amendment, which prohibits lobbying, does the gentleman support, and what kind of lobbying is the gentleman from California willing to vote to prohibit? If that is so, all I want to say is the Gekas amendment clarifies whatever the gentleman supports in the Frank amendment. Mine clarifies and makes it easier for you to support it.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, here is the distinction: I am not one of the great fans of the Frank amendment, because the Frank amendment seeks to prohibit certain activities that I think go beyond what I would want to prohibit. It prohibits any activities on behalf of grassroots organizing through the Legal Services Corporation. It prohibits involving one's self in electoral ballot initiatives. It prohibits coming up not in response to congressional inquires and seeking to influence the process. It goes too far.

It codifies in many respects and goes beyond in the areas of grassroots lobbying the restrictions which have been attached to appropriation riders for all these years. I did not like the riders then and I do not like them now.

But what it does not do is to so completely isolate the interests of these people, the people who are least able to find alternative ways of organizing and marshaling their positions to the policymakers, the executives, regulatory, Federal, State and local, it does not put them in those kinds of shackles, and, therefore, is a fairer approach.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Chair will inform Members engaged in the debate that although the time for both the amendment and the substitute is fungible, it is the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] to close debate.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, might I inquire how much time is remaining on the Gekas amendment?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has 11½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is therefore willing to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] that in our original colloquy the grassroots type of lobbying that the Frank amendment prohibits, that kind of ability on the part of poor people is going to be prohibited? That is prohibited by the Frank amendment, and why is the gentleman from California willing to embrace it?

The gentleman from California is willing to embrace the Frank amendment, which prohibits grassroots organizations from having the legal entity or legal services lobby.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, let me say on behalf of my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON], I think I got a handshake from him, but it was not an embrace.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, if the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is willing to prohibit lobbying on a grassroots level, then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON], or the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR], are going to be caught in a little bit of a trap, because their interest in grassroots organizations for rental control or for bankruptcy control or whatever is going to be limited. But the gentleman from California is willing to support the Frank amendment, which prohibits lobbying in that accord.

Mr. Chairman, I am saying that what the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is saying in supporting the Frank amendment is that he understands for the first time and is saying on the floor that he understands that there is a tremendous delineation between the original purpose of Legal Services to provide individual poor clients with help where they need it most, and this wild area of endeavor that has started unintentionally, never intended by the Congress when they established Legal Services, of a lobbying effort on so many different subjects that actually draw resources away and attention away from the public and everything else, to the detriment of that individual that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] wants to help and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] wants to help and the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] wants to help, and where they agree with the Frank amendment should not be involved in lobbying efforts.

That, to me, is unfathomable. The lobbying efforts to which the gentleman refers on the private sector are funded by our fellow American citizens with nontax dollars.

What the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is saying is that what they can do by raising private funds, we ought to allow Legal Services to be victimized on taxpayer funds where we are trying to serve poor people, to allow those resources to be used for lobbying efforts.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that we ought to reject the Frank amendment and do a little better thing, support the Gekas amendment. Both of them support lobbying.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, let us talk about these wild endeavors. Let us talk about this diverting of resources to the detriment of clients. Let me give you three examples from my own State of Oklahoma.

First, juvenile justice reform. For decades, regrettably, my State had a very troubled youth program where we locked away youth that were very seriously physically abused.

The Oklahoma Legislature started considering sweeping juvenile justice reform. Because many of the abused children were represented by Legal Services, they asked the Legal Aid of western Oklahoma to help them draft that legislation. That would not be allowed under the Gekas amendment.

Second, the garnishment of exempted funds. Many elderly in my State should enjoy the same basic rights as any other elderly throughout the country; that is, to have their disability benefits exempted from State and Federal garnishment. But our Oklahoma law did not provide that. Because of that, there was a change in the law.

That law was written by a Legal Aid attorney in western Oklahoma at the request of the legislature following a court decision.

Finally, remedies to domestic violence. A State legislator in Oklahoma was concerned about the plight of the domestic violence victims and, since a lot of our Legal Aid lawyers represent those people, he asked that person to come and draft the legislation to solve that problem. That would not be permitted under the Gekas amendment.

What we are talking about here are two basic things: First, allowing us to go to the people who are the best experts many times, better than the agencies themselves, to give us the information to make good decisions. Second, for us to perform our job as U.S. Congressmen, and not to limit the access of information that we get from one source so that we can make better legislation, so that we can make the laws work properly. That is what this is all about.

I do not like the Frank amendment. The gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] does not like the Frank amendment. We would not have the Frank amendment if we did not have this absurd Gekas amendment, which would take away from the basic rights of Members of Congress and the members of our society to provide input to Members of this institution. I ask for a "no" vote on the Gekas amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I have been here for some time listening to this round robin and I must tell my colleagues, it is a little difficult. I think we have a distinction here without a difference.

I simply would want to say that I am willing to vote and willing to support legal help for poor people. I am not willing to support political organizing.

I support the Gekas amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, at the risk of grating on my colleagues, I simply want to repeat, because I think again, we have to try to focus on the elements of the debate as in their purist sense.

If the Frank amendment prohibits lobbying and the Gekas amendment prohibits lobbying, then we have only to determine a policy decision. Should the Legal Services Corporation be engaged in lobbying?

If so, we vote against both and allow a full range of lobbying activities to be carried on by the Legal Services Corporation.

If Members feel strongly that they should not be involved in Legal Services, adopt the Gekas amendment and reject the Frank amendment, because the Frank amendment, while it purports to and says that it prohibits certain lobbying efforts, has so many exceptions in it that they engulf the proposition of prohibition against lobbying, while the Gekas amendment very succinctly and very absurdly, in the eyes of one, but one which works, makes that delineation so clear that the original policy of preserving Legal Services for aid to the poor will be preserved.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I speak in favor of my substitute. There are differences between the amendment I offer and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

He is right. Many would allow the Legal Services people unrestricted lobbying. Let me point out that most of the restrictions on lobbying are in neither my amendment nor in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], but in the bill which we have presented. My amendment would add one further restriction. It basically keeps the Legal Services people entirely out of what has been known as grassroots lobbying.

That is, they will not be in the business of organizing politically, no matter who asks them.

Here is the difference, as I think it was made clear in the colloquies with myself, the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from Oklahoma, and the gentleman from California.

As written, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, and I will read it, and there is no saving clause, no money can be used from any source that goes to Legal Services "to pay for any oral or written communication, letter, printed or written matter, telegram, telephone communication," among other things, "intended or designed to influence any Member of Congress or any other Federal, State, or local elected official."

As the gentleman from Oklahoma pointed out, an earlier draft of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, "You can answer a question from a Member of Congress." That was removed and, as written, we would have to advise the Legal Services Corporation that if a Member of Congress or member of a State legislature or mayor said to a Legal Services official "What is your opinion of this public policy," that official could not answer.

Yes, one can represent, as the gentlemen from Texas noted, someone in the case before an administrative agency. But this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania goes further than the gentleman's rhetoric, it goes further than good sense.

Yes, my friends have made it clear. They think I have gone too far. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made me into a moderate.

We say, one cannot engage in unrestricted lobbying. One cannot do grassroots organizing. But if one is asked one's opinion by members of legislative bodies or others, one may answer.

I ask for a vote in favor of that restriction and then for the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2(c) of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the Gekas amendment, as amended by the Frank substitute.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 222, noes 196, answered "present" 1, not voting 15, as follows:

Messrs. DORGAN of North Dakota, WYDEN, KOPETSKI, and WHEAT changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 15, printed in House Report 102-512.

AMENDMENTS EN BLOC OFFERED BY MR. FISH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendments en bloc.

Amendments en bloc offered by Mr. FISH:

"(iii) Not later than 30 days after receiving a written request alleging that a recipient, other grantee, or contractor has violated the provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, guideline, or instruction issued under this title, or any other law, the Corporation may initiate an investigation. A recipient, grantee, or contractor that is the subject of such investigation shall be notified by the Corporation and, prior to the completion of the investigation, provided with a reasonable opportunity to respond to the allegations either in writing or in person, as determined by the Corporation. Unless required by law, the Corporation shall not make the findings of its investigation public until a final report is issued or unless such disclosure is made with the consent of such recipient, grantee, or contractor. If, at the conclusion of the investigation, the Corporation determines that it will take action under paragraph (5) of this subsection, it shall notify the recipient, grantee, or contractor of its right to request a hearing. A hearing must be requested not later than 30 days after receiving the notification.".

Page 37, line 18, strike "(b) TIMEKEEPING.—".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to remedy a number of problems that are presented by the Judiciary Committee-approved version of H.R. 2039. Specifically, my intent is to ensure that the Legal Services Corporation [LSC]—through its Office of Monitoring, Audit and Compliance and its Office of Inspector General—will be able to effectively oversee the activities of Legal Services recipients and grantees. The purpose is to assure grantee compliance with applicable LSC regulations and guidelines as well as provisions of Federal law, and should not be controversial.

Mr. Chairman, I have been a supporter of the Legal Services Program since its inception. It is important that we are here today to take action on a Legal Services Corporation reauthorization bill. As my colleagues know, it has been many, many years since the Legal Services Corporation has been reauthorized. Unfortunately, over the years we have turned to the appropriations process as the means of extending the life of the Legal Services Corporation and its activities. I am pleased that we are here today prepared to deal with this in the appropriate, policy-making fashion.

Turning again to my amendment, allow me to further explain its purposes. As reported by the Judiciary Committee, H.R. 2039 would impose rigid, time-based deadlines on investigations conducted by the monitoring and compliance section of LSC and the inspector general's office. Specifically, the bill requires that such investigations be completed no later than 90 days after their commencement. To place such an unrealistic and unnecessary deadline on the lifespan of investigations is impractical and counterproductive. My amendment would eliminate the arbitrary 90-day limit on such investigations. At the same time, it assures that recipients, other grantees and contractors will receive due process during the course of such investigations.

Second, the proposed bill before us would allow Legal Services Corporation recipients and grantees to co-mingle LSC funds with funds from other Federal sources and, most notably, non-Federal funds. Under current law, however, grantees are required to maintain separate records and accounts for those funds. Thus, the LSC is able to track Federal funds and identify their use in connection with certain activities, thereby insuring that such moneys are not used for activities that are prohibited by Federal law.

Under my amendment, the language of H.R. 2039 would simply return to the language of the current law. Specifically, section 1010(c) of the Legal Services Corporation Act would remain in effect. This provision (codified at 42 U.S.C. section 2996i) requires that the corporation and its grant recipients keep separate accounts for Federal funds and non-Federal funds. Thus, the corporation will be able to continue to assure full compliance with the law.

Finally, my amendment would eliminate language contained in H.R. 2039 that would arbitrarily restrict LSC and IG access to recipient-grantee payroll records, attendance records, and other relevant documents which are now subject to review and audit. This is achieved by eliminating certain language contained in section 6(c) of H.R. 2039.

Mr. Chairman, Federal Privacy Act (5 U.S.C. 552a) is designed to control the release of information by Federal agencies. It does not govern entities such as grantees and contractors separately from a Federal agency. It was not intended to prevent access by responsible Federal officials. It is a protection against disclosure by such officials. Similarly, State privacy laws were not intended to impede the ability of Federal agencies to assure that fraud, waste, and abuse do not occur in connection with the use of Federal funds. The language of my amendment, however, does make clear that monitoring by the corporation or the inspector general shall take into account the personal privacy rights of eligible clients and protects records and other documents in connection with such activities from public disclosure.

Recent Federal court decisions have upheld the right of access of the Legal Services Corporation to recipient program documents and records. Multnomah Legal Services Worker's Union v. Legal Services Corporation, 936 F.2d 1547 (9th Cir., 1991); Lawyer's Union of Rural California v. Legal Services Corporation, N.D. Calif. Case No. C-91-0442 (February 18, 1992). The case law lays down a bright-line rule: except for matters explicitly protected by the attorney-client privilege, the LSC is entitled to access to all recipient documents, so long as the Corporation's purpose is to ensure the recipient's compliance with the LSC act and the terms of the grant agreement. The rule is clear, simple, and workable.

Again, under my amendment the attorney-client privilege is respected. That is, the identity and personal privacy of Legal Services clients would be protected against needless public disclosure. But, at the same time both the inspector general's office and the Office of Monitoring, Audit, and Compliance would have the necessary access to grantee records to ensure legal compliance.

Mr. Chairman, as a supporter of the Legal Services Program, I believe in its goals and that it is needed. Poor and underprivileged individuals need assistance with legal problems they may face in areas such as divorce, child support, child custody, landlord-tenant, consumer protection, and so forth. Nevertheless, Congress must ensure that the Federal funds that are funneled through the Legal Services Corporation to the various recipients/grantees throughout the United States are used appropriately and fully consistent with legal requirements.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The committee will rise informally in order that the House may receive a message.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business during rollcall votes No. 96, No. 97, No. 98, No. 100, No. 101, and No. 102 on Wednesday, May 6, 1992. Had I been present on the House floor I would have cast my vote as follows:

Rollcall, No. 97—"yea" on Mr. HUGHES' motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 3247.

Rollcall, No. 98—"yea" on agreeing to House Resolution 444 to provide for consideration of H.R. 2039, the Legal Services Reauthorization Act of 1991.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. McCathran, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its sitting.

LEGAL SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1991

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to accept this amendment from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, who has done so much to fashion and craft this legislation.

The amendment, reflecting the qualities of its author, makes moderate modifications to the investigations provisions in the committee bill. Unlike the broad sweep of the McCollum amendment of the use of funds, which we will be considering—and I will be opposing—next, the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] makes moderate changes in the use of private funds, actually restoring the current law on this issue. The Legal Services programs have been able to live with that current law.

The amendment provision on privacy is also quite acceptable.

In the interests of achieving a middle ground, I urge my colleagues to accept this amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my committee chairman very much for his graciousness.

Mr. Chairman, I yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] a member of the committee.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to rise to support this amendment. I am glad to see the committee chairman is accepting it. It is a very critical amendment. It does improve the bill; albeit it does not go as far as I would like to see or as we have discussed earlier, was not allowed to be offered as my amendment.

But what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is doing in part does restrict the problems we would have with privacy laws in States. I was very concerned, I still am concerned about the restrictions on monitoring. The fact is that the inspector general is worried about where you get 50 different States and 50 different laws out there involved in the process, what that is going to do to the ability of the organization, the national organization, to be able to look at these grantees and their paperwork in order to know if there is waste, fraud or abuse, or anything else.

So to the degree that Mr. FISH's amendment goes further than that, and one of the major things it does, to the degree it addresses that problem by exempting the inspector general from the onerous burden put on in the bill for compliance with the privacy acts of every State, I think it is a very, very good amendment.

However, I want to remind my colleagues that the inspector general still has problems, and has issued a letter to us saying that he does, because there are provisions in the bill that are not addressed by this amendment, that we have no amendment allowed out here on the floor to address, that apply all of the rules and ethics procedures of every State bar association to restrictions on privilege to get at these documents, instead of having the canons of ethics apply nationally which do right now. We are going to wind up, probably, with an inability of the inspector general of the Legal Services Corporation from looking at materials even with this amendment.

But it is a good amendment, as far as it goes. I am very much for it. I am glad the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] offers it. I certainly think it improves the bill, at least in the areas he has addressed, and I thank him for offering it, and I appreciate it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, if there are no other requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. (Mr. MFUME). Is there a Member in opposition to the amendment?

If not, the Chair will put the question.

The question was taken; and the chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 16 printed in House Report 102-512.

AMENDMENTS EN BLOC OFFERED BY MR. MCCOLLUM

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendments en bloc.

"(c)(1) Any non-Federal funds received by the Corporation, and any funds received by any recipient from any source other than the Corporation, shall be accounted for and reported as receipts and disbursements separate and distinct from Corporation funds. Any funds so received, including funds derived from Interest on Lawyers Trust Accounts (IOLTA), may not be expended by recipients for any purpose prohibited by this title or the Legal Services Reauthorization Act of 1991. The Corporation shall not accept any non-Federal funds, and any recipient shall not accept funds from any source other than the Corporation, unless the Corporation or the recipient, as the case may be, notifies in writing the source of such funds that the funds may not be expended for any purpose prohibited by this title or the Legal Services Reauthorization Act of 1991.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not prevent recipients from—

"(A) receiving Indian tribal funds (including funds from private nonprofit organizations for the benefit of Indians or Indian tribes) and expending them in accordance with the specific purposes for which they are provided; or

"(B) using funds received from a source other than the Corporation to provide legal assistance to a client who is not an eligible client if such funds are used for the specific purposes for which such funds were received, except that such funds may not be expended by recipients for any purpose prohibited by this title or the Legal Services Reauthorization Act of 1991 (other than any requirement regarding the eligibility of clients).".

Page 39, line 2, strike "has a single identity" and insert "or otherwise, has a significant identity".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment dealing with the use of non-Federal funds to circumvent the restrictions that we have placed in the law on the activities of Legal Service Corporation lawyers. It does not probably appear to many people as to what these circumventions are all about, but the fact is that we pass restrictions here in this body and have over the years and are doing it today, and they are frankly worthless, they are meaningless, unless we come in with something that will keep these lawyers from using non-Federal funds from either bar associations or cities or counties or wherever they are getting the money to go out and do the very things we say they cannot do. This make no sense to me.

That is what my amendment is all about, is to just say, "Hey, look: for anything that this Congress says you can't do with Federal money, then you, as long as you are a Legal Services grantee of the Federal program, you cannot take outside money and go do the same thing wearing that hat. If you want to go under another hat and under another nonprofit corporation or whatever and do those activities, fine. But don't wear our hat, don't do what the public has and expects us to uphold in the way of restricted activities."

I would like to read my colleagues the broad areas which we have restricted.

Right now under law, and we may have variations on it, but these are the things that are restricted, the types of cases where Federal involvement of Legal Services lawyers is restricted by Federal law: Criminal cases, redistricting cases, certain restrictions on class-action cases, restrictions on abortion cases, restrictions on fee-generating cases, they cannot take them. Restrictions on handling cases on eviction of convicted drug offenders in public housing.

We also have restrictions on the activities for which the funds may be used. We cannot have activities involving partisan polities, voter registration, certain lobbying activities, solicitations, inciting litigation, political training, picketing, boycotts, the recovery of attorney's fees, and so on.

Now, all of those are logical restrictions we placed in the law already. I am not talking about anything today that we may have been debating, amendments that might have been proposed, ideas I might have generated out here today to try to add to those restrictions.

These are the restrictions that exist today. These are what were in the law either in the form of the last time we authorized this bill years ago, or through the process of the riders that have gone on the appropriation bills through the intervening years.

These are the restrictions. These are what we say. Many of them, many restrictions that we do not want Legal Services lawyers doing. We do not want them doing these things for varying reasons of public policy.

Now, why should we be allowing them to escape that. Why should we be allowing these Legal Services lawyers under our program, a Federal program we created, why should we be allowing them to do all of those things?

Mr. Chairman, why should we be allowing these attorneys that are our attorneys out there in the field representing our Federal program, we created with Federal money, why should we be allowing them to completely circumvent all of the restrictions we have passed in law by using non-Federal moneys and saying, "Well, we are just going to go do that?"

I have no problem with iota bar funds being used by the local organizations that are out there, as long as they are doing things which we have not said you cannot do.

I have no problem with the iota bar funds or municipal moneys being used to do things we said you cannot do, as long as they are doing it under somebody else's name. Set up another organization.

In my home county we have a fine legal aid society of the Orange County Bar, which operates side by side with the Legal Services Corporation. They do the bidding of the Orange County Bar Association, some 2,000-plus attorneys. They do a fine job. Both of them do great jobs and complement each other.

If you want to have lawyers doing things that we have said do not do, then set up another structure to do it. It is not very costly to do, and it certainly is a more responsible method than this one, which makes a sham out of the restrictions we have on all these things we restrict.

It is absolutely a sham to have the same lawyers wearing the Legal Services hat of X, Y, or Z Legal Services Corporation going out and doing the very things we have said you cannot do, and then saying, "Oh, but I did them because I had some other source of funds that allowed me to do that."

I could go lobby all that I wanted to lobby in Washington or Tallahassee for whatever purpose, even though I am restricted on it, it does not matter, because I am using dollars I got somewhere else while I am wearing this hat.

That is an absurdity. My amendment simply corrects this absurdity and loophole and makes the restrictions we have meaningful. Otherwise there is no point in any of the restrictions we have passed.

It is nice to say we do not want Federal funds used for this. This is a Federal program. This was a federally created program. It would not exist but for the Federal Government.

Where it is a Federal program that is involved, we have every right to monitor it and hold people accountable for it. They are using the color of our name. When I go to a town meeting or you go to a town meeting, the public has every right to demand us to explain why an attorney wearing the name of the Federal Government is out doing something we have said they cannot do.

□ 1750

I submit to my colleagues, we cannot explain that because there is money from somewhere else.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCOLLUM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make sure I understand.

I know how the gentleman defines this because the words define themselves, but how does the gentleman conceptualize significant identity of interest between what would be prohibited and what would not be prohibited?

I am concerned, and I do not think the gentleman from Florida wants to do that. I want to make sure that part of the colloquy would satisfy me, that that is not the intent of the gentleman.

For instance, if we have a church, and a large law firm and several other organizations out in the community that all adopted different programs on behalf of the poor and one had a breakfast program or lunch program for senior citizens, one had pro bono lawyers, significant interests?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, what we are talking about is a mirror corporation. They should not be allowed to set up another corporation, same board of directors, everything, and then have a mirror corporation in the sense that we have in corporate law.

We are not talking in terms of anything else.

I am glad the gentleman asked me so we can have a colloquy defining that so there is a history on the floor of that.

That is all we are talking about in terms of that.

The main thrust of my amendment is not to do with mirror corporations.

I want to be sure everybody understands that. That is an adjunct to this to make sure we do not have something out there trying to circumvent it through that type of thing.

The main thrust is what I have stated it is. I do not want to see the main corporation using other moneys to do the things we have restricted. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Is there a Member in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment, which the Committee on the Judiciary rejected by a vote of 12 to 21.

Congress has placed restrictions on how moneys it appropriates can be spent by Legal Services Corporation programs. These restrictions do not mean that other legal activities by the programs are somehow unimportant, improper, or inappropriate. They do not mean that eligible poor people have no other claims worthy of legal assistance. They merely reflect the priorities that Congress has set for its dollars to this program.

Just as we in Congress have the right to say how scarce Federal resources will be spent by Legal Services programs, our colleagues in State and local governments should have that same right—they may have different priorities than we do here at the Federal level—priorities that also deserve to be served.

The same holds true for private funds. Private funding sources are often quite willing—I am glad to say—to lend assistance to providing for the legal needs of indigents in their communities. There is no Government expenditure involved in the donation of these funds; and we should not be tying their hands. At a time when more and more people are falling below the poverty line through no fault of their own, there is no reasonable explanation why we should not allow private donors to help in meeting the fundamental need to provide legal representation to the poor.

There are plenty of protections in H.R. 2039—strict accounting requirements, timekeeping, recordkeeping—to ensure that restricted Federal LSC funds will not be misspent or somehow mixed up with other sources of funds. In addition, we've already adopted the Fish amendment which restores current law on use of private funds. That current law has worked well, and we should draw the line here. I strongly urge the rejection of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. Chairman—In establishing the Legal Services Corporation in 1974, Congress included prohibitions in the Legal Services Act that prohibit Legal Services grantees from engaging in various controversial activities. Because Congress recognized that recipients might use private funds as a way of circumventing the restrictions on certain activities, Congress explicitly applied the same restrictions on the use of non Legal Services funds.

Many local Legal Services programs currently, however, use Federal funds received from the Legal Services Corporation to raise additional private funds, or funds from private, nongovernmental sources. These Legal Services programs then use the private funds for their own purposes, including purposes that are forbidden by the Congress.

The McCollum amendment would maintain the current prohibition on private funds being used for prohibited activities and extend this prohibition to cover all public, non-LSC funds. Furthermore, the amendment makes it clear that people are free to set up financially and physically separate organizations that do not receive Federal subsidies that would not be subject to the limitations under the Legal Services Act.

The McCollum amendment is about good government. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON], a member of the committee.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the committee for yielding time to me.

A problem that I have with the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM], I listened carefully to what he said. I think that he makes good points in terms of where he is attempting to direct us. But I think the analogy that we should use is that he is killing a mosquito with a shotgun.

This is too broad and it goes too far for the very reasons that I attempted to elicit in the question that I asked of the gentleman. I am glad the gentleman from Texas is also listening.

There are people out there that we have already prohibited from having the services that are available. Let us say some refugees that are taken in by a church and the church wants to support them. What this amendment does is require duplicity of effort rather than, say, that the Legal Services attorneys representing these people on a matter that is identical to the matter the church wants to represent them. The gentleman requires them to go get another lawyer to duplicate the effort, when it is cheaper to take the scarce resources that are available.

We know down in Texas how scarce the resources are. What is wrong, since we have already prohibited, we have become the board of directors for the Legal Services Corporation by the Congress' action. We have taken away most of the authority of the board that we created to make these decisions. But just use that example.

So we have some refugees from Timbuktu, and they have a claim because of some problems that legitimately—if they were not refugees, if they were not aliens—they would be within the confines of what we have said, whether it is eviction from some old rickety, worn-down apartments. We require the Legal Services attorney to take on certain people who fit within the definition of what we think ought to be their clients. We require the duplication of effort, instead of that church money going into the same pot to help fund the whole resources, which really helps us make up for the shortcoming of the resources the Federal Government is now providing. What we are doing is dividing the resources down and requiring two lawyers to do the work of one, that one lawyer could do.

I think that with the scarce resources we have available, we should not be doing that in this day and time.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman probably misunderstands part of my amendment. I want to make sure he does not misunderstand it. My amendment does not prohibit the use of non-Federal funds or Legal Services lawyers to represent ineligible clients. It is an interesting twist involved in this, but we have made a big effort here to make sure we can still use these other IOLTA Bar funds, or whatever, to go represent the refugees or people who are not eligible under our laws as individuals to be represented.

The only thing my proposal does is restrict them from doing activities, representing the types of cases that are restricted, but they can represent the illegal aliens, for example, with IOLTA Bar moneys—or whatever else—and go and do a joint case like the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming the time that the gentleman gave me, if I understand correctly, and perhaps I do misunderstand, if they prohibit the use of private funds to do what they could not do with public funds, that is what the amendment does, is that correct?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I understood the thrust of his amendment to be that he was prohibiting the use by an LSC attorney with private funds to do that which he could not do with governmental funds. Is that correct?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, except, if I may reclaim my time, the restriction with regard to representing ineligible clients. They may still represent otherwise ineligible clients. They are simply restricted from doing the kinds of activities, the types of lobbying, or the activities that we prohibit, that we restrict, not the clients. That is a big difference.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If the gentleman will yield further, I see what he means. My example was inappropriate. Let me change the example to be one where the activity rather than the services rendered as a lawyer is considered, and would not the same example then be true with respect to the activity?

I am not quarreling with our right as a Congress to limit the activity of people that we hire, but I am quarreling with the fact that we are requiring a duplication of effort when there are good Samaritans out there in the community, such as church organizations. Why do we not let them supplement the fund, since we all agree we do not have enough resources to go around?

Mr. McCOLLUM. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I understand the efficiency argument the gentleman is arguing, but it is because of the color of our law where we have restricted this, and I think that is paramount to the questions the gentleman raises of efficiency, because I think the problem is we do not want Legal Services lawyers doing this. We say they cannot, and the public thinks they are all ours. They think every time they go out they are wearing the imprimatur of Congress and they are Federal Government, and the public does not distinguish the difference.

My amendment is to protect that and to try to protect us from those accusations that have caused us so much trouble in funding Legal Services, to truly keep them out of those activities and keep the appearance, the appearance of impropriety, which is really what we are talking about here, from imbuing to these Legal Services lawyers in the eyes of the public, so we can get a better credibility to this system. That is the reason.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Chair would advise those Members controlling the debate that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has 10½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. BACCHUS].

Mr. BACCHUS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment offered by my friend, neighbor, and colleague, Mr. McCOLLUM.

Recent events in Los Angeles have reminded us that much more must be done in America to secure and assure equal justice before the law.

As a fiscal conservative, I believe it is altogether appropriate that we try, whenever we can, to help provide such assurance without Federal tax dollars.

We do so in Florida through the Florida Bar Foundation, which supplements the resources provided for needed legal services by the Federal Government.

In many ways, these added resources have helped further the cause of equal justice for all. This has been especially so in the case of aliens who are not eligible for legal aid paid for with Federal funds.

Recently, in Lake County, in Mr. MCCOLLUM's district, a couple asked for help from legal services. Although they were not U.S. citizens, their daughter was. The daughter was severely retarded. She had been raped and was pregnant. She bore the child, a baby boy, but was unable to care for him. With non-Federal funds, legal services lawyers filed a guardianship motion on behalf of the grandparents, kept the family together, and kept the daughter and the child from becoming wards of the State. This could not have been done under the McCollum amendment.

Recently, too, in nearby Osceola County, in my district, a pregnant illegal alien asked for help from Legal Services. She needed prenatal health care. With non-Federal funds, legal services lawyers found a place for her in a local clinic and she had a healthy baby, an American citizen. This could not have been done under the McCollum amendment.

And recently as well, in Osceola County, another woman who was not a citizen asked for help from Legal Services. She and her children needed protection from a violent and abusive husband, with non-Federal funds, legal services lawyers secured a temporary restraining order. This could not have been done under the McCollum amendment.

I believe that we have every right to determine how Legal Service lawyers in Florida and elsewhere use Federal funds. I do not believe that we should impose the restrictions of the McCollum amendment on the use of non-Federal funds. And I do not believe that the cause of equal justice under the law in America would be served at all by such restrictions.

Vote "no" on the McCollum amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to simply say that as much as I respect the gentleman from Florida, the point I was making to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] is en point to what was just said, and I hope the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BACCHUS] would listen to me on this because every one of the case examples he gave, as I understand his giving them to me, would be eligible under the McCollum amendment.

If one has an ineligible client, Mr. BACCHUS, they could still under the McCollum amendment be able to use non-Federal funds and be able to do the things described, like in the divorce case. I do not prohibit the use of non-Federal moneys.

Mr. BACCHUS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACCHUS. I would say to the gentleman that I have consulted with our staff on that very issue and asked them that question, and they have told me that despite the assurances of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] to the contrary, his amendment would prohibit such activities.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I am sorry the gentleman feels that way, or his staff does. They obviously have not read this properly. We have been very careful in how we have crafted it. I would be glad to sit down with him or his counsel and go over the details. We have made sure that every person who is not eligible, particularly illegal aliens, will continue to be able to be represented by Legal Services lawyers with non-Federal funds. It is just a question of their not being able to do abortion cases or doing lobbying cases or doing those kinds of things and activities that we have said are not permissible. I think that is exceedingly important. We have not delved into the other activities in representing noneligible clients. So every example the gentleman gave, unfortunately, is inapplicable to my case.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2039 and in opposition to the McCollum amendment, and any other amendment that attempts to restrict how local and State governments use their own non-Federal funds to provide legal services for the poor.

This amendment would be a radical departure from both H.R. 2039 and the current law, which impose no restrictions on public funds so long as they are used for the purposes for which they are provided. Neither we in Congress nor the Legal Services Corporation should be permitted to tell other public funders how to spend their resources.

In my State of Florida, the largest source of non-LSC public funds for civil legal assistance comes from interest on lawyers' trust accounts, or IOLTA. In 1981, led by the organized bar, and I am proud to say that I was one of the original petitioners to the Supreme Court, Florida became the pioneer in developing these resources. It implemented the first program in the Nation that permitted attorneys to place trust funds into a pooled interest-bearing account. The pooled interest is remitted by the banks to the Florida Bar Foundation, which allocates funds to 44 different programs.

I believe the Fish amendment takes care of the accounting procedures and segregates these funds. Between 1981 and 1990, the Florida IOLTA program raised almost $22 million, allocating over $18 million to support legal services for the poor. During 1991, IOLTA raised an additional $19.8 million, and building on Florida's success, the District of Columbia and 48 other States now have their programs, and it has raised over $280 million.

Because LSC funds meet only a small fraction of the acknowledged legal needs of our Nation's poor, we should encourage, not curtail, their further development. I strongly urge that we defeat the McCollum amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK].

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me that at a time in our history when the funds for support of so many laudable public projects is so limited, and faced with so many problems with regard to our deficit and our national debt that we would want to do so much to help people in this country supporting programs like Legal Services. We have in so many instances reached out our hands and said to the community at large, both the State and local government and the private sector, "Come, join in the enterprises that are going to strengthen our communities and provide the basic services that people are entitled to have."

In so doing, in creating the Legal Services Corporation we have invited the bar associations, the private attorneys to create special programs like the interest-bearing trust accounts which have been committed to the services of legal programs for the poor. In doing that, we would want to invite the widest latitude of participation.

If we begin to start limiting how these programs that are to be joined together with the Legal Services Corporation, then we will cut them out, we will discourage them. This is not an attempt to circumvent the laws and the restrictions that have been put on the program by the Congress or by the Appropriations Committee. That is certainly not the intent. The intent is to make this program grow, double and triple, and to get all of the private funds and all of the bar associations and all of the State funds that can possibly be put in to service the poor.

The restrictions that are in the legislation are not intended to be standing out there as things that lawyers ought not to do. It is only that the Congress has seen fit to restrict and to confine the activities of the lawyers, and these restrictions have no bearing whatsoever on the practice of law and the entitlement of the poor to legal services in our community. And I hope that Members will vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Chair would state as a point of clarification and advise the Members that although the amendment under discussion is that of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], the right to close debate is reserved by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], as the manager of the bill.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time and for his leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. Let us be clear what this amendment proposes to do. This amendment would extend prohibitions on the use of Legal Services Corporation [LSC] funds to cover non-Federal funds, so that LSC agencies would be prohibited from handling certain kinds of cases, funded. In other words, we would be telling these agencies which are trying to provide poor individuals with legal assistance what they can do with the money they obtain from non-Federal sources.

Mr. Chairman, Congress should not interfere in decisions by those willing to give private financial support to attorneys working for the poor on how to allocate their funds and with whom to contract.

Members who believe that the Federal Government must do more to encourage private and local funding for all types of community activity should oppose this amendment. If this amendment were to pass, public and private sources would be discouraged from making any donations to LSC agencies.

Members who argue that the Federal Government should interfere less with programs at the local level should also oppose this amendment. By dictating what can be done with their money, this amendment would constitute an unacceptable infringement on the prerogatives of public funders, such as the interest on lawyers trust accounts funds [IOLTA], which are willing to give financial support to lawyers working for the poor.

Other public funders should be free to adopt goals and purposes that are different from those adopted by Congress. Indeed, it can be argued that dictating how non-Federal monies are spent abridges the free speech of the legal services agency, by restricting what it can do and how it can advocate with those non-Federal funds.

Mr. Chairman, one type of case that this amendment would prevent legal services agencies from pursuing is the fee-generating case. Fee generating cases from non-Federal sources fulfill two worthy goals: Enforcement of civil rights laws, and a source of revenue used to expand services for the poor and indigent. The major civil rights statutes have fee clauses in them. They are the Federal Government's incentive to encourage private enforcement of the Civil Rights Act. To deny legal services agencies this right is to deny access to competent legal counsel for those who seek to remedy discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, why should Congress single out legal services and the poor that they serve for these severe restrictions, denying them the use of private and public funds that it has permitted other organizations receiving Federal funds to use without any restriction? If the non-Federal sources are dissatisfied with the way that money is spent, let them take that up with legal services agencies—do not make the Federal Government do their job.

Again, I urge my colleagues to vote against the McCollum amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 45 seconds to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the committee for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the McCollum amendment. The Federal help for poor people legal services has been diminishing since 1981. The gentleman from Florida properly points out that this is a Federal program, but it has been a reduced Federal program since 1981.

In many States, including my State of Maryland, the amount of non-LSC funds exceeds the amount of LSC funds in providing legal services to our poor people. So we are actually doing better with our private poor funding sources than with the Federal Government. This amendment, if it were adopted, would have a very chilling effect on the locals' ability to raise funds to help poor people, and we do not want to do that.

There is already protection in this bill, as amended, to protect against misuse of Federal funds. We make sure that that is included in the bill. But this amendment goes a lot further.

I am surprised to see so many Members ready to stand up about undue regulation against business, but this amendment would have undue regulation on our States, on the use of their own funds.

I urge the Members of this Committee to reject the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself my remaining time to close the debate on my side.

Mr. Chairman, this debate has certainly become a little confused, and I think we ought to straighten it out right here and now.

There is nothing about my amendment, absolutely nothing that would prohibit or restrict Legal Services Corporation grantees from accepting IOLTA bar funds or funds from municipalities or any other sources to do the activities that they normally would do in representing clients, and it is wonderful that Florida and other States have adopted the process to get all of these new moneys into the services of the poor.

But let me tell Members something else. If they do not vote for the McCollum amendment, a "no" vote on the McCollum amendment is a vote to allow Legal Services lawyers to engage in partisan politics, it is a vote to allow Legal Services lawyers to engage in political training, it is a vote to allow Legal Services lawyers to engage in reapportionment, redistricting activities, and it is a vote allowing Legal Services attorneys to engage in abortion cases. It is all of those things. A vote against the McCollum amendment will allow that. Members must vote "yes" on the McCollum amendment if they want to prohibit Legal Services lawyers from doing those things that we traditionally have prohibited them from doing. Otherwise they will be free to do it, and any other language in this bill is a mockery about restricting them from those activities.

So, I urge my colleagues, think about it a minute. If Members are opposed to letting Legal Services lawyers be engaged in politics, in political training, in picketing, and boycotting, in redistricting activities, and in abortion, then by all means if they are opposed to that they must vote for the McCollum amendment. Otherwise they will be in the streets doing exactly that. They have a free hand to do it, and I urge a "yes" vote for those restrictions to be enforced.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining 1 minute and 45 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSTAD] to conclude the debate on our side.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Administrative Law Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over the Legal Services Corporation, I rise to offer my opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, appropriations riders currently prohibit using Legal Services Corporation dollars to provide legal representation for indigent refugees and other aliens. However, an amendment I authored that was adopted by the Judiciary Committee, will continue the current practice of allowing private funds to be used for representation of these individuals.

This provision ensures that many needy people will be provided quality legal representation, while protecting the freedom of local United Ways, foundations, and other private funding sources to decide how funds are to be used.

These immigrant and refugee clients have presented some of the most desperate and heart-wrenching cases seen by Legal Services attorneys.

In Minnesota, for example, Southern Minnesota Regional Legal Services has received $500,000 from a consortium of eight foundations and corporations to provide civil legal services to Cambodian families who have settled in our State. Approximately one-half of these cases involve representation of Cambodian families currently living in refugee camps in Thailand who seek to reunite with Cambodians living in Minnesota.

There is strong support in the State of Minnesota for legal assistance to these refugees. This is demonstrated by the broad base of financial support from foundations, corporations, churches, private agencies such as Catholic Charities and United Ways, State and local governments, as well as the Minnesota State Bar Association.

While I recognize that fiscal realities require us to prioritize the use of Federal Legal Services dollars, we should not turn down refugees who desperately need representation when private groups are willing to provide funding to represent these individuals.

As now drafted, H.R. 2039 will ensure that many needy people who are ineligible for Legal Services Corporation funds will be provided quality legal representation through the generosity of local United Ways, foundations, and other private funding sources.

Mr. Chairman, this is a sound bill to provide responsible funding for Legal Services, while ensuring accountability on the part of local Legal Services programs.

I urge my colleagues to reject the McCollum amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). All time has expired.

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote.

Mrs. Byron for, with Mr. AuCoin against.

Messrs. GALLO, DE LA GARZA, and WILSON changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LEWIS of Georgia) having assumed the chair, Mr. MFUME, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2039) to authorize appropriations for the Legal Services Corporation, and for other purposes had come to no resolution thereon.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 429

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN] be taken off as a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 429.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION. 287, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET—FISCAL YEAR 1993

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 287) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. GRADISON

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. GRADISON moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House Concurrent Resolution 287, the current budget resolution for fiscal year 1993, be instructed to include in the conference report the provision in section 14 of the Senate amendment (relating to the adoption of a joint resolution to amend the U.S. Constitution to require a balanced budget).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, my motion instructs the House conferees to agree to language contained in the Senate budget resolution recommending adoption of an amendment to the Constitution regarding a balanced budget and requiring the President to submit balanced budgets.

My motion does not embrace any particular resolution or proposal. Several competing plans have garnered substantial support in both Houses. The motion to instruct simply offers an opportunity—the first opportunity in the 102d Congress—for Members to vote on the general proposition of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

This is a propitious time to consider a balanced budget amendment. A conference agreement on the fiscal year 1993 budget will soon be brought back for a final vote. It will recommend total Government spending that exceeds recommended total revenues by about $330 billion, give or take a couple of billion. As a result, by the end of fiscal year 1993, the public debt will stand at a staggering $4½ trillion. Just paying the interest on this debt will consume one out of every six dollars spent by the Federal Government.

This simply must not be allowed to continue. Any mainstream economist will tell you that deficit spending drives up interest rates, saps private investment, and creates balance of trade problems. Over the long term, chronic budget deficits retard the growth in productivity essential to improve living standards. Ultimately, deficits foist the obligation of paying for our current consumption onto the shoulders of future generations.

A balanced budget amendment would fundamentally change the calculus by which Congress makes spending decisions. It would counter the natural tendency to vote for spending increases in individual programs benefiting parochial interests that, taken together, undermine the general economic welfare.

I do not lightly support amending the Constitution. I share James Madison's aversion to trivial amendments to the Constitution. But the dangers inherent in amending the Constitution must be weighed against those of large and continuing deficits. The dangers of deficit spending are truly Madisonian in proportion; continual large deficits undermine the very social contract the Constitution sought to preserve.

This motion to instruct will serve as a test vote on the generic notion of whether the House will support a balanced budget amendment. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes."

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little bit more elaboration on the Senate language. Is that a sense-of-the-Congress?

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, it is a sense-of-the-Senate. The essence of the language—let me read it, just one sentence.

I quote from section 14 of the Senate budget resolution:

> It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget and requiring the President of the United States to annually submit a balanced budget and that the adoption of such joint resolutions should occur on or before June 5, 1992.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GRADISON. I thank the gentleman for his inquiry.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this instruction deals with language that the Senate inserted in the budget resolution. It is sense-of-the-Senate language, and the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, and the adoption of such joint resolution should occur on or before June 5, 1992. Frankly, I anticipated that it would be the position of the House conferees to yield to the Senate so that they could decide what language they wanted to include with regards to this sense-of-the-Senate language. We normally, with deference to the other body, allow them to insert whatever sense-of-the-Senate language they wish to insert.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to oppose this motion to instruct. Let me just say though, on behalf of the House, that we are, in fact, engaged in hearings now in the Committee on the Budget, looking at the issue of a potential balanced budget. We have had hearings that involve economists. We have had representatives from OMB. We had Director Darman from OMB today. We have had CBO. We will have academics, we will have Members, we will have Governors, and we will have legal experts. This is an issue that needs to be carefully considered. This is a serious step, and we need to evaluate its implications for the Constitution, as well as for this body.

It is very likely that, with regards to the House, we will also face a similar vote with regards to a constitutional amendment early this summer, but this specific language, just so everyone understands, applies to a sense-of-the-Senate language.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I, too, yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. LEWIS of Georgia). The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 322, nays 66, answered "present" 1, not voting 45, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT, HELP US HEAL

(Mr. NAGLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. NAGLE. Mr. Speaker, at this time of national anguish, America needs its President to help us heal, to help us get over the pain, and begin to rebuild a community of opportunity, hope, and peace.

But President Bush seems incapable of rising above politics, even now. Reflexively, after 12 years of neglect from the White House, he points the finger at Congress.

The President must be listening to the wrong advisers again. He should listen to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Colin Powell, who spoke movingly of the unrest during Fisk University's commencement Monday.

General Powell spoke about his pain, but he also spoke about his hope, and about community.

He said:

> We have an American problem. It can only be solved by all Americans working together.

He articulated the truth clearly:

And he called forth the best in us:

> We must work it out. We must believe we can work it out. If I didn't believe to the depths of my heart that we could work it out, I wouldn't be able to call myself an American.

Mr. President, stop listening to the attack men. Listen to the wisdom of General Powell. Help us heal.

I am inserting Mr. Powell's remarks in the RECORD. I commend them to your attention.

REMARKS OF GEN. COLIN POWELL

Thank you, Mr. President, for that most kind introduction. It's a great pleasure to be with you all on this beautiful May morning.

Mr. President, Trustees of Fisk University, distinguished guests, platform guests, alumni, faculty, parents, family and, yes, graduates of the Class of 1992—it is a great day for you, isn't it! (applause)

Now, as you heard my biography being read, you know why I'm here today: I'm Alma Vivian's husband. (laughter)

I graduated after she did. I graduated from City College of New York in 1958. Before you start wondering about this, I'm older, she's smarter. (laughter)

The first issue I want to deal with this morning has to do with what's in the minds of the graduating seniors—the question that's in the mind of graduating seniors around this country at commencement time. And that is—How long is this guy going to talk? (laughter)

How long are we stuck here before we can get this on and be graduated and be on our way.

They want it short. Get it done. Let's go.

The parents however have a different view. That's right. They travelled a long way. (laughter) They waited for four years. They want their money's worth! (laughter). As far as they are concerned, I ought to be here an hour or two! (laughter)

Faculty members have a different idea. One of the faculty members surely was responsible for thinking up the idea of asking General Powell to come here. And he wants me to speak long enough so it looks like sensible decision, but not so long that he has to leave town before the next faculty meeting. (laughter)

Meanwhile, I'm stuck with the paradox of how long to speak. And it's going to be a function of how well you receive my remarks, students. So, if you are nice and receptive and if I hear a lot of applause, we'll be out of here quickly. (laughter and applause)

Coming here on the airplane, my staff showed me a little clipping out of the weekend newspaper. There was a picture of me next to this clipping.

The little article—it was in USA Today Magazine—and it said, "General Powell we know you're speaking at Fisk University. Don't worry about what you say because no one is going to remember what you say anyway."

I couldn't believe this!

So I asked Alma, "What did your commencement speaker say 35 years ago?" And she said, "Say what?" (laughter)

I said Alma, "Who was your commencement speaker 35 years ago?" (laughter) And she didn't have a clue.

Now, you are not going to embarrass me 35 years from now when I come back. So my name again is General Powell—P. O. W. E. L. L. (laughter and applause)

Alma may not have remembered who her commencement speaker was, but she certainly remembered other things about Fisk:

She told me how, as a 16 year-old when she arrived here she had never seen Fisk, so of course she was worried when she arrived on campus. But her worry and her concern disappeared at once because she fell in love with Fisk the moment she saw it. And the marvelous teachers and the superb education that they delivered increased her affection over the years.

And she told me about the way it was 35 years ago, about the dresses and the high heels the ladies wore to class, and about the handbook for the ladies which Fisk issued and which laid down the dress code.

She told me about the Oval and how it was the center of campus life, and about Jubilee Hall and about the Jubilee Singers touring all over the world.

She told me about the soldiers from Fort Campbell (laughter) and the medical students from Meharry—she said she had never seen so many good-looking men in one place at one time. (Laughter)

And finally, in her recollection of her college days, Alma Vivian let me know that she was utterly charmed by Fisk, and that the passage of 35 years had not dimmed the warm glow of love she feels for this wonderful place. I know your memories 35 years from now will be the same.

To the faculty and administration of Fisk University, my congratulations to you for having done it again, for having performed this magic one more time. The results of your work and the evidence of the talent and dedication that you brought to that work are sitting here before us. You must feel a great sense of pride along with the pride that the graduates and their families feel.

To the families—mothers, fathers, wives, husbands, children, sisters, brothers, grandparents, aunts and uncles, all assembled here today—I know what is in your hearts: love, pride—and relief! (Laughter)

Alma and I have attended two such commencements of our own and this coming Sunday we will go to our final commencement—for our daughter, Annemarie.

I'm proud to say—and very happy to say—that earlier this year I wrote the last check to a college after ten years of writing checks. Amen! (Laughter)

And of course to the graduates, my heartiest congratulations. Your accomplishments are soon to be rewarded. Your hard work, commitment, and perseverance have paid off. You can take enormous pride in your achievement. I know this will be a redletter day in your memories, a very, very special day for the rest of your lives.

This is a very special day for me also.

It's special because I get to look out over some of the most talented young people in America getting ready to march off and tackle the toughest problems this world can throw at them.

I have to marvel as I think back over the last 35 years at what an incredible world you are entering compared to the world Alma and I faced.

We graduated as the Cold War was heating up. Its lethal arsenals of nuclear weapons were growing ever more ominous. The world at that time seemed full of gloom and despair.

You graduate as that Cold War has ended and as finally we step back from nuclear Armageddon and cut those nuclear arsenals. You enter a bright, hopeful world full of promise and excitement.

We graduated as the shadow of Communism darkened whole sections of the globe.

You graduate as Communism lies dying. Its few remaining disciples are international basket cases.

We graduated as the chains enslaving Eastern and Central Europe were drawing ever tighter. They had even built a terrible wall in Germany.

You graduate as the power of the people has swept away the chains, torn down the wall, unified Germany, and put the dictators in Moscow out of business.

You graduate as democracy and the rule of law are sweeping more and more of the world into their embrace.

We graduated as Nelson Mandela stood trial for treason in South Africa. In 1964, he would be put in jail for what they thought was life.

You graduate with Nelson Mandela a free man! (applause) And he and President de Klerk and other enlightened leaders are working together to destroy apartheid once and for all.

I graduated to join an Army that was very large and getting ready to grow even larger. It was a Cold War Army.

You graduate as we are taking America's Army and Armed Forces to the lowest level in fifty years. This will be a post-Cold War force. We will spend less money on defense. We are going to pay a peace dividend to benefit other parts of our society.

Yes, the contrasts between the world you enter today and the world Alma and I entered many years ago, are stark indeed.

But perhaps nowhere is the contrast more stark than in the lives of African-Americans, then and now.

Alma and I graduated as the Civil Rights movement was beginning to gather steam under the forceful leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and others. African-Americans, lviing separate and unequal lives, were setting out to change the American scene.

You graduate as their efforts have resulted in a thousand successes—in legal rights, in housing rights, in education, in government and, yes, in my beloved Armed Forces.

The young black Captain just back from Vietnam 30 years ago who couldn't get a hamburger at a Georgia restaurant unless he went to the back window has become Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff of America's Armed Forces. (Applause.)

Alma and I, and so many others here, lived through this struggle in which African-Americans finally began to win their full legal rights as citizens of America. We watched it happen. We were young adults like you when all of this change began.

And how did this change in the lives of black Americans, African-Americans come about?

It came about through the sweat and tears and sacrifice of thousands of African-Americans. It came about on the strong backs of black men and women who struggled mightily for our future.

As a member of America's Armed Forces, I climbed on those strong backs. I climbed on the backs of the Tuskegee Airmen, the Buffalo Soldiers, and other black military units, and on the backs of strong men, famous men like Benjamin O. Davis, Jr. and Chappie James.

Alma climbed on the strong backs she found right here on this inspired campus. And your President climbed on the strong backs he found in the fields of education, economics, and business and corporate management.

We all climbed hard. And all of us have to remember the brave people who went before and upon whose backs we climbed. All of us have to remember where we came from and what it was like then if we are to understand where we are heading and how to get there.

We also must remember that it could only have happened in America. America is the only country in the world that strives incessantly to make the dream of America the reality of America.

Last week's scenes from Los Angeles and a dozen other cities tell us vividly that we still have a long way to go before that dream becomes reality. (applause)

As I saw those pictures on my television set, my heart hurt. I know that your hearts hurt. I didn't want to believe what I was seeing.

Violence—by the police or by the mob—is not the answer. Our hearts hurt because of that violence. And our hearts hurt because as we watched the tragic events in Los Angeles unfold, we were thinking: No, not again. We can't let this happen again. It shouldn't be, we've come too far for this.

But it did happen. And we see once again what a long way we still have to go.

Because the problem goes beyond Rodney King. The problem goes beyond Los Angeles. It goes beyond the trial of those four officers.

The problem goes to the despair that still exists in the black community over the inability of black Americans to share fully in the American dream. (applause)

Too many African-Americans are still trapped in a cycle where poverty, violence, drugs, bad housing, inadequate education, lack of jobs, and loss of faith combine to create a sad human condition. A human condition that cannot be allowed to continue if this nation is to hold its rightful place in the world.

We have an American problem. It can only be solved by all Americans working together.

As Rodney King himself said so powerfully the other day:

"Please, we can get along here. * * * We've just got to. * * * We're all stuck here for a while. * * * Let's try to work it out. * * * Let's try to beat it. * * *"

Ladies and gentlemen, I say to you we must beat it. We must work it out. We must believe we can work it out. If I didn't believe to the depths of my heart that we could work it out, I wouldn't be able to call myself an American.

In 1963, John F. Kennedy was assassinated. In April, 1968 Martin Luther King was gunned down in Memphis and our cities were in flames. Two months later, Bobby Kennedy was murdered.

The reason we were able then to overcome such tragedies is that we have a political system that can respond, that accommodates change, that is always moving forward.

The resilience of our system, our ability to change, our respect for human rights and respect for the rule of law help us to weather any storm, to overcome any difficulty. We can bounce back.

What we must never lose is faith. Faith that in the end right will prevail. Faith in the basic goodness of America and in the basic goodness of Americans.

We must remember that America is a family. There may be differences and disputes in our family but we must not allow the family to be broken into warring factions. (Applause)

In a few moments you will become members of that family. Here's what I want you to do:

First, I want you to believe in yourself. You have to know that you are capable, that you are competent, that you are good. Your family and Fisk University have seen to that. But you have to believe it. I want you to believe that there is nothing—nothing—you cannot accomplish by hard work and commitment. Let nothing or no one ever destroy that belief you have in yourself.

Second, I want you to believe in America with all your heart, with all your mind, with all your soul and with all your body. I've travelled around this world and I've seen a hundred countries and I've got to tell you there is no better place or system on earth than that which we enjoy here in America.

America is the hope and promise of the world. We are still, as Abraham Lincoln said, "the last, best hope of earth."

Third, I want you to find strength in your diversity. Let the fact that you are black or yellow or white be a source of pride and inspiration to you. Draw strength from it. Let it be someone else's problem, but never yours. (Applause) Never hide behind it or use it as an excuse for not doing your best.

We all have to live here together—Asian-Americans, African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, all of us.

Together, intertwining our many differences and diversities into a mosaic of strength, we will prevail over the darkness of racism. I want you to love one another, I want you to respect one another, see the best in each other. Share each other's pain and joy.

I want you to fight racism. I want you to rail against it. We have to make sure that it bleeds to death in this country once and for all. (Applause)

As you move forward, I want you to remember those who are still struggling. We must all reach back, we must all reach down, we must all work together to pull our people, to pull all Americans out of the violence, out of the dank and soul-damning world of drugs, out of the turmoil of our inner cities. As we climbed on the backs of others, so must we allow our backs to be used for others to go even higher than we have. (Applause)

Finally, I want you to raise strong families. I want you to create families and raise children who are God-fearing, who are loving, who are clean, and who are determined to do even better than their parents.

As you raise your families, remember the worst kind of poverty is not economic poverty, it is the poverty of values. It is the poverty of caring. It is the poverty of love. (Applause)

The other evening, Alma and I were privileged to be with Maya Angelou. She talked about her upbringing in Stamp, Arkansas. She told us something her grandmother had said to her many years ago. Her grandmother had said, "Girl, when you cross this threshold you're going to be raised."

So raise your children. Treasure them. Love them. They are our future. We cannot let the generation in front of us go to waste.

To look out at you gives me enormous hope. You look so competent, so strong, so young, so committed, so ready to take on the future, difficult times and all.

Looking at you gives me the same feeling of pride that I get when I look at our soldiers, our sailors, our airmen and Marines and Coast Guardsmen. I know when I see them that there is nothing they can't handle, no difficulty they can't overcome, no challenge they don't relish, no mission they can't perform.

Very soon you too will be soldiers. Soldiers in the exciting struggle of life. Soldiers for education. Soldiers for business. Soldiers for science. And, above all, soldiers for a better America.

I believe in this great land that God blessed and called America—because it is full of young men and women like you. Men and women who will keep this nation moving on down the road to glory, its beacon of freedom lighting up all the dark places of the world until there is no darkness left.

We're counting on you! We're counting on you!

Thank you so very much for letting me share this special day of your lives.

Congratulations, good luck, God bless you, and remember Fisk! (Applause)

F-15 SALE TO SAUDI ARABIA: GOOD FOREIGN POLICY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address an issue that is sparking a fire of controversy in this Congress and in some parts of America. A few months ago, the Government of Saudi Arabia requested from the Bush administration the opportunity to purchase 72 United States built F-15 Eagle Fighters from the McDonnell Douglas Corp. That request has been held up by the administration because of opposition here in Congress—opposition which I feel is detrimental to our foreign policy interests, detrimental to our long-range economic interests, and detrimental to our employment interests in the United States.

Unfortunately the F-15 sale has thus far been pitting workers of America and the McDonnell Douglas Corp against the Jewish community. This is to some extent, leading to a degree of anti-Jewish sentiment among those workers who are anxious about their jobs.

As a long-time supporter of Israel I find that unfortunate. I want to assure this body that there are many in the Israeli community who agree with the sale. They feel that the only way to control the use of arms in the Middle East, is to be able to provide the arms and then control the parts necessary to operate those arms. Our European counterparts in Great Britain, France, and the Commonwealth of Independent States are more than willing to pick up were we leave off.

King Fahd of Saudi Arabia has said that "The kingdom of Saudi Arabia will develop its armed forces, whether the land forces, the air force or the navy as far as it can, and to the extent it believes it is adequate to stand up to any aggressor." Saudi Arabia could just as easily have asked for British Tornadoes, England's premiere fighter aircraft, but they ask for F-15's because they are superior.

A refusal to sell the aircraft will decrease our influence over other events in the region because aircraft supplied by other countries are not subject to the restrictions that we put on their use. In the same manner, only if we supply the planes will we be able to control the parts. Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf said on June 12, 1991 that "The Iranians had F-14's but they were totally ineffective in the Iran-Iraq war because the United States simply didn't supply the spare parts."

F-15's are different than older model fighters because many of the most critical components are made only in the United States. While there are many countries who could supply parts for planes like the F-4, only the United States could provide Saudi Arabia with the advanced semi-conductor technology and avionics needed to operate the radar equipment. Likewise, only the United States can provide the crucial engine technology needed to make the F-15 as maneuverable as it is.

McDonnell Douglas experts estimate that if the United States were to cut off the pipeline for parts to Saudi Arabia, their F-15's would be reduced to mere surveillance craft within 30 days. They would not be able to perform their fighter role for which they were purchased without U.S. assistance.

In the same way, many of the weapons used on the F-15's are manufactured and maintained solely by U.S. firms. The Saudis rely on contract maintenance. United States intelligence reports clearly confirm the size of the Saudi stockpile and the quality of those weapons and we can pull the plug on their use rather quickly. The impact of terminating their maintenance schedules would be clear and dramatic within 30 to 60 days.

On the domestic side, the sale of 72 F-15's would add $5 billion to the U.S. economy and keep the eagle production line up and running for at least another 5 years. In my district of Tulsa, OK we produce conformal fuel tanks, the Aft fuselage, and the AIM 120 launchers for the F-15's, products which are responsible for the employment of 750 people.

Nationwide we would lose 40,000 aerospace jobs in 2 years if we were to lose this sale to Great Britain, and let me assure the Members of this body that they are waiting. Ninety percent of all British built aerospace products go overseas and most of them to Saudi Arabia. They want nothing more than to keep that going.

Unfortunately, their interests are not always our interests. It is well known that the European philosophy toward arms sales is much different than ours here in the United States. There has been much documentation on recent European nuclear arms sales in the Middle East and the sales of high technology components to Iraq. So I urge Members of this body to be very cautious before making up their minds on this issue. I urge Members to consider the foreign policy impacts, the long-term economic impacts and employment impacts of not supporting the U.S. aerospace industry.

And, finally, I urge all who are concerned with the potential sale to recognize our only consistent friend in the Middle East—Israel. Many supporters of Israel agree that this sale offers the greatest protection of our security interest in the Middle East.

OPPOSITION TO THE ADMINISTRATION'S PROPOSED CUTS IN THE FEDERAL CRIME INSURANCE PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose the administration's proposed cuts in the Federal Crime Insurance Program. Since 1981, the Reagan and Bush administrations have repeatedly called for the elimination of this program which has provided affordable criminal insurance to tens of thousands of businesses and residences across the country since its inception in 1970.
